Grace Waldron,

—OR—

THE FALSE DAUGHTER.

A TALE OF NEW YORK.

CHAPTER XIV.

The season at Saratoga was at its height. No one, to have seen the fashion and the display, would have dreamed of the peril to the country, or of the fearful loss of life. Saratoga had lost most of its southern belles, but the lovely representatives of fathers who had made fortunes by swindling contracts, supplied the places of those aristocrats by nature, which the south had for years furnished to our fashionable watering-places. There had Grace Waldron gone, drawn thither by her father, with the vain hope of dispelling the deep gloom, which he could but notice had settled over her life, and the cause of which he more than suspected, and followed by Harry Liston as her shadow. The same quiet assumed possession of her which he had adopted he continued still, but the yoke began to gall, and more than once, Mr. Liston had been made to feel that it did. Since he commenced the pursuit of Grace Waldron's fortune, he had given up gaming, and had used the small remnant left of his father's property in operating in stocks, a less condemned manner of carrying on the same business. He inherited great shrewdness and good judgment, and in his stock speculations had been very successful. At Saratoga he was gay and happy, rich and courted again, but with one single aim and object—to marry Grace Waldron.

At the window of her room in "Congress Hall," one afternoon sat Grace Waldron, but her thoughts and her heart were far away upon the world talked of peninsular. The newspapers had informed her there had been hard fighting, first success, and then disaster; but she had studied the list of killed, wounded and missing, and had not found the name much more to her than all others from the general commanding down to the poorest private. Her father had returned to New York for a day or two, leaving her to the care of Harry Liston, and not much relishing too much of that gentleman's company, she had spent most of her time in her own apartment. But now she saw her father approaching the hotel, and hoping to hear some news from him, she hastened to meet him.

"Grace, I have brought you a package which came from the army of the Potomac. It arrived some days ago, but by some mistake I have only today received it. Open it and see what it contains."

The hands of Grace Waldron trembled as she endeavored to open the package, and when that blood-stained handkerchief met her view, it needed no note to tell her the meaning of the return of her memento. With a shriek which seemed to rend her very heart she fell fainting to the floor, and when Frederic Waldron read that which Colonel Bland had written, there was no further need of surmise as to the love his daughter bore for Victor Stanhope. That note contained these words: Miss Waldron, The little memento I send you at the request of Captain Stanhope, is bathed with his blood shed in defence of the banner which you placed in his keeping. He felt that there was no hope of his recovery, and ere this reaches you he will be free from cares and troubles. In the hurried retreat of the army, I know you will excuse my brevity and believe me with deep and sad respect.

COLONEL WALTER BLAND.

Grace Waldron recovered her consciousness but to lose it again when she learned the contents of the note. Frederic Waldron felt how much he had misunderstood his daughter's heart, and if such a thing were possible he worshiped his child more completely in her unconsolable grief. Grace begged, prayed to be removed from that scene of heartless festivity, but it was some days before her physician deemed it prudent. Harry Liston in vain applied to see her; she would see no one.

On the banks of the Hudson, a few miles above the city of New York, Frederic Waldron had purchased a house shortly after the disappearance of his wife and there every year, at about the anniversary of that event, he retired and spent some weeks with his daughter and a portion of his household. The house stood back some two hundred yards from the road, completely surrounded by trees of low and heavy foliage, and thick underwood. It was a dark, gloomy place and Grace, from her childhood, had dreaded the yearly visit to it, both because the place itself was so dismal and because while there her father seemed always brooding over some secret sorrow. But now that her own heart was wrung with grief, Grace yearned for the deep, sad stillness of that forest home and though, at her father's invitation and most decidedly in accordance with his own inclinations, Harry Liston had followed her there, his judgment prevented him from intruding himself upon her evident desire for solitude.

Hester Granger was of course with them. Of course she thought as the rest did, that there was no doubt at all that Victor Stanhope had died of his wounds. It would seem that poor Grace, bowed down and broken hearted, might have won her sympathy; but she was not one to turn from her purpose and one dark night there was a whispered conversation under the deep willows down by the brook, a conversation when one of the parties paid liberally for information from the other, which had the singular effect of turning the current of a certain gentleman's affections, and to relieve Grace Waldron from the over-zealous attention of Mr. Liston.

At first he doubted, and feared it was some trick devised to drive him from the pursuit of Grace and her fortune, but Hester Granger brought such proofs that he could no longer doubt. He had been just on the point of offering himself and respectfully urging his suit as in harmony with the wishes of their fathers, and now he thanked his lucky star that he had not so committed himself. No fear, Mr. Liston, for though Victor Stanhope had been dead there was no place in Grace Waldron's heart for you.

This country residence of Frederic Waldron's was arranged with rooms on each side of a long hall or entry way running the whole depth of the house. On the right, as you entered, were two large drawing-rooms very simply furnished, and, on account of the utter seclusion of Grace and her father while there, but seldom opened. On the left, which was a little the less gloomy side of the house, were two rooms corresponding in size with those across the hall.—The front room being fitted up as a library for Mr. Waldron and was also used, when he and his daughter were there alone, as a general sitting and dining room, her dismal boudoir containing her piano and such articles as she desired, to make it more cheerful. The windows were low and opened upon a piazza from which, so closely was the house surrounded with trees, one could step into what was really quite a forest. The servant's apartments were in an extension of the right or north wing of the house and all the doors and windows to this extension were on the north face, and therefore in the evening, the room which Grace occupied was so lonely with the darkness of the forest not even relieved by the light from the servant's quarters, that Grace seldom sat there, but was generally with her father in the library, the two rooms communicating by a large sliding door, the upper half of which was of ground glass. Lately, however, because she courted solitude and to rid herself of Harry Liston's presence, she had spent many evenings in the darkening summer twilight in her own room. It was evening. The day had been hot and sultry, but the night air was cooler and somewhat damp. Harry Liston had that morning left, saying he should go down to the city, and Grace, being secure of freedom from his company, had put on her hat and shawl to take a breath of air beneath the trees and mourn for Victor Stanhope. She had just returned and thrown off hat and shawl, when voices in the next room caught her ear and she listened with terrified attention.

Frederic Waldron sat in his library. A knock on the door and an answering "come in" and into that library stepped the woman who has been already described, who had startled Victor Stanhope with her mysterious story,—the long lost wife of Frederic Waldron.

"Sir," said she, as she entered the room, "I have taken this liberty, if it be such, that I may claim justice through you for one who for years has been wronged. Listen with attention and knew that what I tell I can prove. You had many years ago a wife—a young, gay, thoughtless wife, but honest and true to you. You charged her with dishonor, and when she declared her innocence you gave her the lie. She left your home and you saw Florence Waldron no more. Your cruelty had maddened her and—,"

"Woman who are you who mention a name heard for the first time in more than twenty years? Tell me! for God's sake tell me!" broke in Frederic Waldron, a horrible suspicion of the truth beginning to glimmer through his mind.

"You shall know shortly; but let me go on with my story. Your cruelty maddened her, and when she did partially recover her senses there was but one idea left in her shattered brain, that was of revenge upon the man who wronged her. It has taken long years to accomplish that revenge, now it will be complete and lasting. That injured woman that discarded wife lives, and she can tell you a tale which will wring your heart and render your future as miserably unhappy as her past has been.

"Tell me," said Frederic Waldron, the perspiration standing in big drops upon his forehead while his face was deadly pale, "tell me where I can find my wife. Oh! woman, Florence will never know how much I have suffered for those hasty words; but tell me that I may even now go to her and beg her forgiveness."

"The woman you once called your wife stands before you."

Frederic Waldron was so taken by surprise at this abrupt confirmation of his shaddowy suspicion that, for a full minute he could not speak. Could this woman, with her gray hair, her sunken cheeks and attenuated form, be the same being as the lovely girl he married? But he believed her, and throwing himself at her feet, he burst forth in agony almost too deep for words, "Oh! Florence, forgive, forgive! Talk not of revenge, but come back to me and let the devotion of the remainder of my life to your happiness compensate in a measure for the error of the past."

"When last we parted, you let me lie at your feet and would not listen to the truth; now lie at my feet, if you prefer that position, for you shall listen to the truth. Compensation! I have my compensation now in store, in what I am about to tell you. You have learned in regard to your wife: I have something yet to tell you of your daughter.

"It is not of her whom the world has known as Grace Waldron, of whom I would speak. May the pride which drove from her one who loved her and was fully her equal in station, however lowly his, sustain her now. Now, man, I will drive a dagger to your heart, the poisoned point of which will rankle there so long as you have breath. You love that girl. I have heard that you set all your heart's affections upon her, and now—thou defamer of thy wife's purity, know that the girl Grace is not your daughter—nor mine. But she who is your daughter, she my child and yours, is now beneath this roof, and whatever may become of me, the true heiress of your name and your fortune must be acknowledged. Ah! you suffer now. Your beautiful Grace, in whom you have felt such pride, must bow her lofty head, and Florence, your daughter Florence, shall take her place. I am sorry for her who must suffer that I may have my vengeance satisfied, but the tide has turned and they who have enjoyed its flood must go down with its ebb."

"Woman! fiend! you sent the child to me yourself and wrote that she was ours."

"Indeed! Do you suppose every word of that note is not burned into my brain. Do you remember the words? I will quote them. 'I send you the child. I did not write our child. Man, do you think I would part with the child I bore, to the tender mercies of him who had driven its mother, branded with dishonor from his home? You look incredulous; behold the living proof that what I speak is true." She turned and opened the door near which she had stood while she was speaking, and drew her daughter Florence into the room. "There, girl, there is your father. He must own you. Love him if you can. You have heard to night how much you have to thank him for; go and receive his embrace."

But the excitement had been too much, and the girl fell fainting to the floor, and Frederic Waldron, like one bereft of reason, stood speechless over the inanimate form of his child.

"If you want further proofs I have them, and in your own family. Granger, come here," and Hester Granger, who had overheard all, entered the room. They seemed to have changed places and characters, those two—he speechless and powerless, she all energy and command.

"Granger, you have heard what I have said to your master; is what I have told him true and can I prove it?"

"Alas! yes, it is all true," answered Hester Granger; and, then coward as well as hypocrite, she continued, kneeling before Mr. Waldron, "I have known this a long time, sir, and would have told you of it before, but I was bound by a solemn oath. Poor Miss Grace, it will come hard on her, and she so proud too, but I could not tell."

"Oh! bring her, bring her, I must see how he enjoys her misery," spoke or rather screamed Florence Waldron, a wild light gleaming in her deep set eyes, and throwing up her arms she burst into a loud laugh or yell of delight. The effort which had given her mind the strength which had carried her though the scene with an appearance of perfect sanesness, passed away with the accomplishment of the purpose which aroused it, and Mr. Waldron, rousing his senses from the fearful stupor which had overpowered them, took her by the arm and bidding Granger take immediate care of the poor girl—his daughter, now—led his wife away, and having secured her in an upper room sent for a physician in whom he could place implicit confidence, and to whom he related the strange history, and before another sun set, by the doctor's advice, Frederic Waldron's poor unhappy wife was in an asylum for the insane.

Little heeded any the one who, in her boudoir scarcely separated from the room in which they spoke, had unseen heard all. With eyes burning with intense excitement and ears strained to catch every word, her hair flung down in wild confusion and thrown back, and her hands pressed upon her throbbing temples, Grace Waldron listened. "Not his child—a foundling, perhaps, with no name which she might call her own. Oh! Victor Stanhope, had you desired it, prayed for it in that hour, you would have had your revenge."

Grace Waldron was quick of comprehension. She could not see her father's face, but she heard no expression of a doubt from his lips after Granger mentioned her name. She remembered how insolent and independent she had been for some time, and she knew no satisfactory account had ever been given her of her mother. She believed, at once, the truth of the story she had heard, lifelong misery though it brought to her. Her outside garments lay where she had thrown them and hastily putting on hat and shawl she passed out through the open window and into the darkness of the woods, intending to go—where she did not know. She heard a low "hist!" a hand grasped her arm, and a voice she knew full well whispered into her ear. "Grace, I know all. I am sorry for you. I cannot of course now think of making you my wife, but you shall not suffer. I am now rich again and until I do marry you shall be my——" The base, insulting word never passed his lips for a blow—well aimed, closed the mouth of the elegant villain and made his teeth shake, and another sent him reeling stumbling, falling among the underbush. It was no maiden's arm which dealt those blows. Edward Morton had that day received the news that Victor Stanhope was alive and well and free, and knowing how deeply Grace Waldron mourned his supposed death, he had come at once to cheer her with his welcome news. Of course, utterly unconscious of the events of the past hour, he did not comprehend the meaning of Mr. Liston's insulting words. In fact he was not certain who was the lady, but he did know Liston, and therefore he knew he could not be far out of the way in chastising him, and before he could see Mr. Waldron and when Grace was nowhere to be found, Edward Morton knew it was she whom he had defended and Frederic Waldron knew that she had heard all. Florence was proved to be his daughter beyond a doubt, for such papers had his wife preserved there could be no question of the fact. Frederic Waldron searched in vain for her whom for twenty years he had cherished as a daughter. The place to hide one's self is in a great city, and this Grace Waldron well knew, and thither had she gone. Her reputed father, forced to acknowledge his child, could not forget Grace and searched in every way to bring her back. The wife having accomplished her purpose, was in a private insane asylum, and Miss Hester Granger was—no longer a member of Mr. Waldron's family. Mr. Liston's true character was made known by Edward Morton, and Florence was in no danger of receiving any attention from him, even had he presumed to offer them. It remained for Victor Stanhope to discover the lost and reunite them all.

A gentleman travelling on a steamer, one day at dinner was making way with a large pudding close by, when he was told by a servant that it was desert. It matters not to me, said he, I would eat it if it was a wilderness.

A SHORT COURSE—An Englishman was telling the late Colonel Isaac O. Barnes, of Massachusetts, of the great rate the cars run in England. 'Why, Colonel, in my country they go seventy-five miles an hour.' 'They do!' says the Colonel; 'they couldn't run long at that rate, for they'd run off the little island.'

REMINDER.

While slowly government moves on Doling out pensions one by one,
Time moves and cruel deeds are done;
Fathers are starved into their graves,
Mothers are doom'd to work like slaves.
Is this your promise to your braves?
Years pass and applicants inquire
For promis'd help; they in patience tire;
They wait with hope—in want expire.
When danger threatened wealth and power,
When bullets rain'd a leaden shower,
What was your cry in that sad hour?
Come to our rescue! Should you die,
With our last dollar we'd supply
The martyr'd soldier's family!
And have you kept your promise true?—
Bounties, unequalized by you;
Pensions, unpaid, long over-due.
Remember, there may come again
The alarum cry, War's bugle strain,
When you may call for help in vain.
Hark! the bell tolls; one more to shelve,
Yet'ran of eighteen hundred twelve.*
No more he'll toil, no more he'll delve.
O'er his lone grave no banners fly—
Left in his poverty to die,
His country's gratitude a lie.
Comrade and friend, 'twere vain to tell
Your sufferings here. Your passing bell
Strikes on my heart, a mournful knell.
Adieu, my friend, now fare thee well.

F. M. ADLINGTON.

Weymouth, July 1, 1869.

*Mr. David Tirrell

THE SEWERS OF LONDON.

A writer in the London Daily News, who made a trip through the sewers of London thus describes what he saw:

Through the kindness of Mr. Haywood, the engineer to the city, we had been handed over to an experienced and practical guide, who with a staff of workmen, proceeded to introduce us to the sewers of London. Before visiting those places you must dress for the part. Long thick woolen stockings drawn up over the trowsers to the hips are covered by equally long greased boots, with heavy turnover flaps, like those worn by the bold smugglers of the stage. To a stout Guernsey shirt is added a smock or pinafore of blue flannel, fastened at the waist by a leathern belt. A fan tail hat, like that favored by the dustman of the period, together with a pair of thick woolen gloves, completed the costume of the two strangers, who, with a select party of professionals, came out of the Guildhall, and drew themselves up by the trap-door in Gresham street, to the intense delight of the loungers at the public house opposite.

A descent of 12 or 14 feet, hand over hand, by and on the iron rings already mentioned, and we are at what looks like the entrance to a wine cellar. Candles stuck into the ends of long sticks, and flaring and sputtering untidily while carried in the hand much as they are in tasting vaults, strengthened the vinous analogy; and we proceeded down some steps and through a narrow passage with a vague impression that we should shortly come upon bins and vats, and be called upon to express an opinion critically upon vintages. A few steps further and the use of the stout, strong boots is apparent; for we are ankle-deep in a black stream, and are in fact, in the middle of the Gresham street main sewer. A bricked tunnel, with ample side space for one person to walk in, and in which you can stand nearly erect; a tunnel which is well ventilated, and where the bottom current is sufficiently strong to carry all before it.

Such is the sewer. We walk up it in Indian file as far as the general post-office, first exploring a black hole at the side which necessitated stooping almost double. Similar holes to the right and left, each contributing their subsidiary streams, represent the various side thoroughfares. That's Aldermanbury; there's Wood street, remarks our guide, as we pass the entrances to the various tunnels representing those places; while at intervals, and when we are near openings, light and sounds come down to us from above, fragments of conversation, the hoarse rumble of wheels, and the busy tramp of footsteps, all telling of the active city life beneath which we were burrowing. It is dark and damp, but not more unpleasant than might fairly be expected. Walls and roofs and sides are moist and slimy, and your footing is often soft and slippery—that is all. Our chief guide has a strong faith in the wholesomeness of sewers. That there is nothing unhealthy in their smell and nothing disagreeable in their interior, that the people employed in them enjoy good health, and that any objection strangers may raise must be put down to fastidiousness of inexperience, is with him a strong article of faith.

We took the air close by St. Martin le-Grand, and went below again at Newgate Market, where we visited a large underground tank, from which water is let down four different sewers, cleansing and purifying all before it. It was quite empty during our sojourn, and the machinery for working it—iron doors, opening by huge screws worked from above—were easily and comfortably examined. We saw no rats, and learned that the drain pipes used now have considerably diminished their numbers. It being no part of our present purpose to describe what has been often told already namely, the system upon which the sewage of London is carried away—we shall confine ourselves to saying simply that we were taken under Farringdon street west. Here the Fleet Ditch was running in two swift black streams, almost below the footway on each side, some three feet six inches deep, and with so strong a current that we were assured it would be impossible to save the life of any one who stepped or slipped into them. These foul streams recalled the ancient Styx, and made one hold back with something like a shudder.

In the course of our inspection we saw more flushing gates, artificial falls of water, traps and locks; but we were below ground, not to examine and report on these, but to realize the strange fact that there is a complete city under the city, and that every street and lane has its counterpart below, up which you may wander while shut out from the world above, as if you were temporarily in your grave. Men have been lost in the sewers—not workmen, but fellows that have stolen down the man-holes for predatory purposes, and who have been as grievously disappointed as the people who came to London fancying it paved with gold. There is something almost awful in the thought of wandering alone dumbfounded and despairing in these vast solitudes, hearing the sounds of human life above you, and failing to make your agony heard. But to visit sewers under such guidance as we enjoyed is simply to attain a novel experience, and to come to the surface besmeared and dirty, but without accident.

A NORTHERN SETTLER'S VIEW ABOUT LAND IN GEORGIA.

From Moore's Rural New Yorker.

I did not aprehend when I wrote my short letter to the Rural of February 8th, that the entire North was in a blaze of excitement, from Maine to Missouri, from the lakes in the North to Mason and Dixon's line in the South, in relation to emigrating to this sunny clime. But such is the fact, and from all parts of the North and West comes the same entreaty for truthful information of the climate, soil, and social condition of the people. While I fully appreciate the earnestness of those who have solicited a personal reply, still the magnitude of such a task—when the number of writers is taken into consideration—would be too laborious for a farmer whose business at this season of the year (we are just in the height of corn planting), is so pressing. I will try in this sketch to answer honestly and truthfully, as far as possible, all the questions asked by the different writers. This shall be no varnished tale, to deceive the people, and fill the columns of a paper to delight the fancy of a fiction reader.

For the first time in our country's history, the doors of Southern emigration are thrown wide open, and a people once proud and happy, with all the comforts of life around them, are now comparatively poor; their fortunes gone; their homes made desolate, and their fondest hopes crushed. In this prostrate and helpless condition, they invite you, with your money, your muscle and your energy, to come and help rebuild, on the ruins and ashes of war, the coveted temple of prosperity.

The large plantation must be divided into glebes of one or two hundred acres, and the small farmer, with a system of mixed husbandry and a new mode of culture, will soon restore the lost elements of fertility to the soil. Part of the lands are worn by excessive cropping, without fertilizing, and the virgin soil, by the slovenly scratching system of culture, has been nearly exhausted. But deeper down lie the mines of wealth, new farms untouched, which, by skilful hands and new appliances for tilling the soil, will fill garners with plenty and bring wealth to the coffers of the State. The people are fifty years behind the times in agriculture, when compared with the thorough and complete system adopted at the North. Where you find one man who plows deep, you will find ten that scarcely plow at all, scratching along the surface with one-horse scooter-plow, at an average depth of about three inches. The first heavy rain washes the surface soil into the creeks and branches below, but when plowed deep, not a particle will be lost. If clover be the sheet anchor of American farming, underdraining is the rudder which guides the ship to a safe harbor. But, alas! how little has been accomplished in laying the foundation for permanent success in Georgia! How few are fields of clover, and fewer still the rods of underdrains. Yet clover flourishes in the middle and northern parts, and underdraining would be equally as advantageous here as, if not more so than, throughout the North.

Mr. David Dickson, of Hancock county, before the war, was demonstrating the practicability of deep and thorough culture and on naturally poor and sandy land, made a princely fortune. Dr. Parker, of Columbia, S. C, (about the same latitude as this place), in 1854, produced on poor, worthless land—as it is called—two hundred bushels and twelve quarts of shelled corn upon a single acre, the largest yield on record. My experience fully corroborates these statements, and I firmly believe that, with proper treatment and tillage, the land will surpass in productiveness the richest lands of the North. The cold, short climate will defeat any effort to compete with us.

Let the same character of emigrants concentrate here that built Chicago, on the swampy shores of Lake Michigan; that has pushed the car of civilization hundreds of miles beyond our Western frontier, and there in the wilderness built cities, reared factories and developed the mines! Let this same energy, skill and capital come here, where railroads are built, schools and churches established, the forests partially cleared away, and the fields ready for the plow, and where the climate favors every undertaking, and in a few short years the South will "bloom and blossom as the rose."

A TRIFLE AND ITS RESULTS.

A man from the country invested five cents in the purchase of an orange, and preparatory to getting himself outside of it threw the peel on the sidewalk. Soon after a young woman came along, slipped upon the peel, and fell upon the walk, breaking her leg. The young woman was to have been married the next day, but wasn't. The man who was to have married her had come from St. Paul, Minnesota, and was obliged to return on account of business, to await the recovery of the girl. On his way back he unfortunately took a train on the Erie railroad, which ran off the track, and his shoulder blade was broken, forcing him to stop at Dunkirk for repairs. The Travelers' Insurance Company, in which he was insured, had to pay $250 in weekly installments before he recovered. On getting back to St. Paul, he found that his forced absence had upset a business arrangement which he had expected to complete, at a pecuniary loss to him of $5,000. Meantime the injured girl suffered a relapse, which so enfeebled her health that her marriage was delayed, which had a bad effect upon the young man, and he finally broke the engagement and married a widow in Minnesota, with four small children. This so worked upon the mind of the girl that she is now in the insane hospital in Middletown. Her father, outraged by the conduct of the young man, brought a suit for a breach of promise, and has just recovered $10,000. The anxiety and expense of the whole affair thus far has been enormous, as anybody can see. Similar cases are likely to occur so long as people will persist in throwing orange peel around loose.—Hartford Courant.

A young lady, visiting in a genteel family, asked the footman for a potato at dinner. John made no response. The request was repeated; when John, putting his mouth to her ear, said, very audibly, 'There's just two in the dish, and they must be kept for the strangers.'

THE GOAT AND THE FUGITIVE.

After the Scottish Rebellion in the year 1745, a chieftain who had taken an active part in it escaped to the Western Highlands, where he found refuge in the house of a relative. But though he had reached so distant a spot, the search after him was so active that it was judged unsafe for him to remain in the house, and in consequence he was taken to a cavern in a very lonely part of the rocks, and furnished with a supply of food. The approach to this place was by a small hole, through which he crept, dragging his provisions in with him. A little way from the mouth of the cavern, the roof became higher; but as he advanced, something on the ground obstructed his progress. He soon perceived that whatever it was, it was alive; and though he was suspicious of danger, he felt unwilling to strike at a venture with his dagger; so he stooped down, and discovered that it was a goat, and her kid laying on a rock.

The animal was evidently in great pain, and on passing his hand over her body he found that one of her legs was broken. He bound up the wound with his garter, and offered her some bread, but she refused to eat, and stretched out her tongue, as if to say that she was thirsty. He gave her water, which she drank greedily, and then ate the bread. At midnight he ventured out of the cave, and pulled a quantity of grass and leaves, and carried them to the poor goat, who showed every sign of gratitude for his kindness. The only thing that the chieftain had to occupy his time in his dreary retreat was in attending to the wants of his companion, and very thankful he was to have any living creature near him. Under his care, the goat very soon regained her strength, and became much attached to him.

There was only one person entrusted with the secret of his retreat: but he fell sick, and it was necessary to send another with the daily foor. The goat, on this occasion, happened to be near the mouth of the cavern; and when she saw a stranger, she would not allow him to enter, but butted him violently. The chieftain, hearing a noise, came out, and receiving the password from the new attendant, prevented the goat from doing any further mischief. So brave and determined did the goat appear to be, that he felt sure she would have died in his defence.

A MAIDEN'S 'PSALM OF LIFE.'—Tell us not in idle jingle 'marriage is an empty dream!' for the girl is dead that's single, and things are not what they seem. Life is real! life is earnest! single blessedness a fib; 'Man thou art, to man returnest! has been spoken of the rib. Not enjoyment, and not sorrow, is our destined end or way, but to act that each to-morrow finds us nearer marriage day. Life is long and youth is fleeting, and our hearts, though light and gay, still like pleasant drums are beating wedding marches all the way. In the world's broad field of battle, in the bivouac of life, be not like dumb driven cattle! be a heroine—a wife. Trust no future, however pleasant, let the dead Past bury the dead! act—act to the living Present! heart within and hope ahead! Lives of married folks remind us we can live our lives as well, and, departing leave behind us such examples as shall tell. Such examples that another, wasting time in idle sport, a forlorn unmarried brother, seeing, shall take heart and court. Let us, then, be up and doing, with a heart on triumph set; still contriving still pursuing, and each one a husband get.

I HAVE STOPPED YOUR PAPER.—The following anecdote, told by a Philadelphia paper, is decidedly suggestive:

Many years ago, Mr. Swain, then editor of the Public Ledger, was hailed at the corner of Eighteenth and Chestnut street by a very excited individual, who informed him, in the most emphatic terms, I have stopped your paper, sir, and proceeded to explain the why and wherefore, all the time gesticulating wildly. My gracious, sir, you don't say so. Come with me to the office, and let us see if we cannot remedy the matter. It grieves me that any one should stop my paper.

Arriving at the office Mr. Swain said, Why, my dear sir, everything seems to be going on here as usual; I thought you had stopped my paper. Then and there the excited gentleman whom the long walk had by that time partly cooled, said that he had stopped taking his one copy of the Ledger. Mr Swain was profuse in his apologies for having misunderstood the meaning of his late subscriber's word, and regretted that he had given him the tramp from Eighteenth street to Third. The gentleman went on his way home, a wiser if not a better man. Before he left, however, he ordered that the Ledger be still sent to his address.

THE COAL STRIKE.—There is a good deal of misapprehension on this subject in the public mind, which is the fault of a portion of the coal operators in the Schuylkill region and some of their agents in this city. It is generally understood that the "strike" is wholly a matter of collusion between the strikers and the coal operators for the sole purpose of putting up the price of coal. This is true of a part of the operators only in one of the coal regions, the great majority of the operators having been opposed to the movement from the beginning, and both they and their men are now and always have been willing to continue their work, but they are overawed and prevented by a powerful secret organization. The operative miners and laborers are also divided in sentiment, just as the employing operators are. A very large proportion of these have been all the time willing to work, but are prevented by the same organizations.

IMPERFECT LEGISLATION.

The liquor law which came into operation yesterday, possesses some singular features in reference to the duties of town agents,—features which will tend to debar any respectable person from accepting the position. As in the former prohibitory law, the Commissioner is required to purchase and sell to agents, liquors of a pure quality, the test of purity being the analyzation of the spirits by an assayer, and no liquors are to be sold by the Commissioner, except such as are certified to be pure, by written certificate of the assayer. If the Commissioner should cause the liquors to be adulterated, he is subject to fine and imprisonment, the latter being state-prison penalty, and if he sells any adulterated spirits he is liable to the same punishment as the act inflicts upon a common seller.

In these respects, the security against fraud on the part of this important official seems ample; but turning to Section 26, we read that "it shall be the duty of the constable of the Commonwealth, either personally or by deputy, to visit each town and city agent as often as once in every three months, take samples of all liquors kept for sale by the said agent, (allowing the said agent to seal the said samples with the seal of his agency,) and forward the same to the inspector and assayer of liquors, with a certificate setting forth the kinds of liquors sent, from whom they were obtained, and the date when obtained; and upon the receipt of the report of the inspection and analysis of said liquors, if it shall be found that any of the said samples of liquors were adulterated, to immediately proceed in a prosecution against the said offending agent, as provided in the preceeding sections of this act," section 21 of which declares that "any town or city agent who adulterates or causes to be adulterated any of said liquors, shall be subject to a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, and be imprisoned in the house of correction not less than six months nor more than two years."

This portion of the act also appears stringent enough to accomplish the intent of legislators in empowering towns to appoint agents, and in a mere hasty reading of the act the question of security against chicanery appears to be settled. We may, however, presume to look a little farther than the members of the Legislature appear to have examined into the future operation of the sections quoted, and consider their bearing upon the parties concerned. The Commissioner appointed, it will be assumed is a gentleman of unquestioned integrity, or at least it is very important that he should be one of that character. The assayer is also to be of untarnished name—free from any temptation to connive at fraud, and vigilant in the discharge of his duties. With these points established, no reasonable doubt could arise as to the harmonious workings of the law, and the effectual checking of fraudulent operations; but on the other hand, should it be found that the Commissioner and also the Assayer had become Burnhamized, and were inclined to tamper with the pure article—laying their heads together in a grand scheme to enlarge their own purses by a concoction of "spirits doubly damned," what is to become of the poor fellows who have accepted their positions as town agents, when the State constables make them a legal call? They have faithfully performed the obligation imposed upon them by the law to purchase pure liquors of the state agency and innocently offer their samples to the constables, who forward them to the inspector and assayer. The assayer, if corrupt, of course would not condemn his own handiwork, but in the event of other parties complaining of impurity, and demanding investigation, the condition of the agent would become an embarrassing one. He could not fall back on the higher officials, for how could he prove that the liquors had been tampered with before purchase by him? The fact that his samples were stamped with the character of adulteration could not be gainsayed; he could not show his innocence in a charge of fraud, on account of this singular incompleteness of the law, and a compulsory residence at Dedham would stare him in the face. Under these circumstances no citizen who desires to fulfil the conditions of the law, and keep his own character unstained, is expected to accept the position; it would be occupied only by one who desired the office as a means of gain by indiscriminate sales, and who would not be deterred from such illegality by fear of fine and imprisonment.

Town officers, also, are brought into difficulty by this seemingly abortive legislation. They are to appoint annually, in July, an agent to purchase and sell liquors, and if they neglect such appointment for three months after the time specified, they shall forfeit one hundred dollars. Which horn of the dilemma will they choose? They may be gentlemen who have a due regard to the public welfare, and will not appoint an unsuitable person to the office, but in an endeavor to make such an appointment are met with refusal of men of the right stamp to place themselves in a position where unscrupulous officials could transfer the whole burden of guilt to their shoulders. Must they then be compelled, on pain of a hundred dollar fine, to place a dishonest man in the position of agent? The law gives them no relief Appointment or forfeiture are its provisions.

We have based these strictures on what might be the result of this incompleteness of the law. It may and will work well in case the State officials are actuated by a spirit of obedience to the Statute, and we do not intend by this expose, to bring forward a shadow of doubt as to their intentions of fullfilling the law strictly to the letter. Further legislation, however, seems to be necessary to prevent the act becoming nugatory in its operation.

DORCHESTER ANNEXED.—Last Tuesday the people of Boston and Dorchester accepted of the act of the Legislature annexing the two cities. The vote of Dorchester was pretty well brought out. Boston, by the addition of Dorchester, has now a total of nearly 10,000 acres and a population of 250,000. Dorchester contained 4532 acres. The official announcement is made by the Secretary of State of acceptance of the act by which Boston and Dorchester are united. So far as relates to the election of ward and city officers the town of Dorchester is to form a part of the city of Boston after the 2d of November next. For the election of members of the legislature, of the Governor's council, and of Congress, Dorchester remains in the districts of which it now forms a part, until otherwise constitutionally changed. The courts also retain jurisdiction in all actions begun before the act takes effect. In all other respects the union will be perfected on the second Monday in January, 1870.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

A correspondent inquires what has become of the co-operative store of East Weymouth, that was to go into operation, and states that one was opened in Haymarket St., London, about a year ago, and has been extraordinarily successful. The sales in one year amounted to upwards of $640.000, the whole original capital being only $12.000 and the profit amounting to over $31.000.

Last Friday night the Temple of Honor, held a grand Strawberry Festival in their Hall at East Weymouth. Over 100 members were present. Among the visitors was the G. W. C. T. of Haverhill.

The Masons had a strawberry festival on Wednesday evening of last week.

The Advent Tent Meeting on Nutter Hill has been well attended, and some interest manifested. Appointments for a continuation of the meeting through the week, were given out last Sunday.

Owing to the bad state of the weather last Sunday, church attendance in this vicinity was quite small.

NEW BUILDING.—K. O. S. C. Lodge 55, East Weymouth, voted at their meeting last week, to erect a building 40 x 80, two stories high, with basement, French roof, and modern conveniences. Hall above, store below, with rooms for various kinds of business. The work is to be completed this season.

Add "Barrett's" to your toilet.

ESCAPE FROM SERIOUS INJURY.—Last Tuesday evening, Mr. Jas. H. Clapp was thrown from his carriage by his horse rapidly turning the bend at Reed's store and received a gash on the head, rendering him insensible for a short time. The horse kept on with the carriage, in which Mrs. Clapp was seated, and becoming alarmed Mrs. C. escaped from the rear of the vehicle, and in doing this was somewhat bruised. The horse was stopped near Peaks' saloon without any damage being done to the team.

WEYMOUTH.

JUSTICE COURT. Thomas Huston and Thomas Briody, of Braintree, were brought before Esq. Bumpus and each fined three dollars and costs for breaking and disturbing the peace, at South Braintree upon last Sunday eve.

Michael Conway, was fined $15,00 and costs for the illegal keeping and sale of intoxicating liquor, at Weymouth Landing.

TRINITY CHURCH, WEYMOUTH.—The Right Rev'd Bishop Eastburn will preach in this church, on next Sunday, the 4th inst, at 10 1-2 A. M., and 7 1-2 P. M. The rite of confirmation will be administered at the evening service.

The usual afternoon services will be omitted, to permit the Sunday School to assemble at 2 1-2 o'clock, for catechising and an address from the Bishop.

NEW FIRM.—P. H. Linton has moved into his new shop at the Landing. The old stand is occupied by a Cooperative Association, who have purchased a Mc-Kay Machine, and will carry on the same business.

Rev. Olympia Brown has returned from her western tour and will preach in her own pulpit on Sunday next.

The Sabbath school Concert at the Universalist Church, on next Sunday evening, will be one of unusual interest. It commences at 7 1-2 oclock.

FIRE CELEBRATION.—The Amazon and Union Companies have invited the King Phillip company, of East Abington and the Fire King Co., of Randolph, to visit them next Saturday, and these companies have accepted the invitation.

FIRE ENGINE PARADE.

The route of the procession, Saturday, will be as follows:

The Amazon Company will leave their Hall at 9 1-2 o'clock A. m., proceed without their Engine to Washington Square, where they will take the Union Company with their Engine, under escort, and proceed up Washington Street to Lincoln Square, where the Amazon Company will take their Engine. The procession will then take up the line of march by the way of Washington street to the junction of Plymouth Turnpike with New Bedford Turnpike, where they will meet the Abington Company with their Engine. The procession will then counter march down Washington Street to Washington Square, thence through East Braintree, by way of the Residence of Caleb Stetson, back by way of Monatiquot Mills, from thence to Washington Square; from Washington down Commercial Street to the residence of Miss Tufts. The procession will then countermarch to Washington Square; from Washington Square to Lincoln Square, where the Companies will partake of a collation at Temperance Hall, after which the procession will reform at Lincoln Square, take up their line of march down Washington Street to Washington Square; from Washington Square up Front Street to Chipman's Corner; thence up Summer Street to Nash's Corner; across Cross Street to the residence of Mr. Cram; thence down Front Street to Hunt's Lane; from Hunt's Lane down Stetson Street to Broad Street; up Broad Street to the residence of Mr. Whittemore where the procession will counter march to Lincoln Square. Each Company will there play their Engine. At the close of the playing the procession will reform and march to Lincoln Hall where a supper will be provided.

The Amazon Company will do escort duty from Washington Square to the residence of David Richards, back to Washington Square; the Union Company will then take the escort through East Braintree back to Lincoln Square, and then to Lincoln Hall.

The procession over the remainder of the route will be under the escort of Amazon Company.

Dr. E. L. Warren has consented to act as President of the day.

Lieut. John W. Hart will act as Chief Marshall.

For the committee of arrangements,
D. SMITH. JR., Secretary.

HANOVER BRANCH RAILROAD.—The Directors have just made their first annual report, from which it appears that the cost of constructing and equiping this road was $102,037,85. The excess of earnings over expenses amounts to $10,033.91, which, with the exception of $16, has been applied to cancel debts. The travel over this road has exceeded the expectation of the stock-holders.

BRAINTREE.

BRAINTREE COLLEGE GRADUATES. The following is a list of all the college graduates which have come to our notice from 1662 to 1844. Many of them became very distinguished, and most of them have a numerous posterity who would be interested in preserving every relic of these ancient worthies. If any of our readers are knowing to any facts not heretofore published concerning any of these, or any other graduates, whom we have omitted, it is to be hoped that they will present them to the Editor for publication, or to "Rumor" who will make a proper use of them. All given below are from Harvard College unless otherwise stated. The dates of graduation are given; while abbreviations are used thus: N. H. for Nassua Hall; B. U. Brown University; D. C., Dartmouth College; M. C., Middlebury College; A. C., Amherst College; Y. C., Yale College.

RUMOR.

SAD CALAMITY.—Our readers remember the violent rain storm on Monday night, and the heavy clap of thunder which was heard at ten minutes of six. After seeing the lightning's flash, how many mothers as they gazed at their household treasures, thought of the danger so near, or of the heart anguish felt by those who can never forget that lightning flash?

Mr. & Mrs. Dr. Cutting, who reside about three-fourths of a mile south of the South Braintree depot, were absent from home during the storm, having left two of their children at their residence.—The eldest, Lizzie Mary, was 10 years of age, and the other only eight. The children were playing in the barn cellar, when the lightning struck the barn, killing Lizzie instantly, and prostrating her sister. A gentleman who was passing, supposing that the barn had been struck, stopped and found the building on fire. While extinguishing the flames, he heard the younger child in the cellar. When taken out she was unable to stand, and could only say that her sister was killed and she was dying. The dead girl was found sitting up, with her head thrown back, apparently having died instantly.

Funeral services were held in the South Congregational Church, Wednesday afternoon. The district and Sunday school, of which Lizzie was a member attended in a body. Rev. D. W. Waldron officiated. The house was crowded. Little Lizzie's early death is mourned, by a large circle of friends, for she was universally beloved.

Nearly all the members of the Baptist Church at South Braintree have dissolved all connection with the Baptist Society in that village, and have withdrawn from the old church organization in a body. They have reorganized the Church and have called a Council to recognize the new organization. The Council meets in the Town Hall, Tuesday afternoon and evening, July 13. Rev. Geo. B. Willtams will be installed as pastor on the evening of that day. On and after Sunday, July 7th, religious services will be held every Sunday in the Town Hall.

A Post of the G. A. R. was recently organized at South Braintree. The Post met Monday night for the election of officers. Capt. James T. Stephens was chosen Commander. We hope all elegible to membership will take hold and strengthen the new organization. Its aim commends it to all who have served in the army or navy.

Mr. George T. Faulkner, of North Braintree, who lost his cow a few weeks since, near Monatiquot River, has been presented with another worth $75, by his neighbors.

FIRE DISTRICT MEETING AT EAST BRAINTREE.—A large and enthusiastic meeting was held at School House Hall, on Thursday evening, to take into consideration the subject of forming a Fire Department within the limits of territory formerly known and designated as the East and Iron Works School Districts, pursuant to the provisions of Chap. 24, Section 35, of General Statutes. The meeting was called to order by Abijah Allen, Esq., one of the Selectmen of Braintree, and it was voted unanimously that we organize a Fire District within the limits described in the warrant.

C. N. Wallace was then chosen Clerk, and a Committee consisting of Edward Avery, Esq., Abijah Allen and E. A. Newton, were chosen to report at a future meeting what officers are to be filled in the organization of a Fire Department. The meeting was then adjourned for two weeks, to hear the Report of the Committee and act thereon.

EAST BRAINTREE CRICKET CLUB.—The members of our cricket club have had several meetings for practice this season. The playing, as is generally the case at the commencement of the season, was characterized by a want of the usual caution, the miscalculation of distances, and a want of a due regard to weight of forces. This is all corrected now, and the playing at the last meeting was very satisfactory.

The club has increased in membership considerably this year and it is fortunate for the club, that the most of these additions are old players from other clubs, and some of them 'crack' players, besides we expect to have a good account of our club this season, and from this circumstance alone.

NORTH WEYMOUTH.

Mr. Editor:—An article in your last issue, headed North Weymouth, and signed W. N., comes down rather severe on the Massasoit and its agent, T. J. Dunbar. We believe such an article is uncalled for. W. N. says the Steamer Massasoit, which was to run to accomodate the travelling public, does not meet the expectation of the people. He says it goes too early, or too late. Perhaps it does to suit W. N. He further says: The owners of the line either intentionally or otherwise, do not run the Steamer to meet the wants of the travelling public, but goes more to accommodate parties from Boston, or pic-nic parties, than it does those who do business in Boston and live at Weymouth and Quincy. Mr. Dunbar has been consultsulted in regard to the matter, and says that if a change in the time of running the boat could be made for the better accommodation of the public, he would be happy to change it at any time. Mr. Dunbar has been at great expense in buying and fitting up, in the best possible manner, the elegant and commodious Steamer Massasoit, for the purpose of running her from Boston to Long Island, Weymouth, and Quincy Point. He has also taken five hundred dollars worth of stock in the Pilgrim Wharf, besides building a depot on the wharf at his own expense, and sheds to accommodate those who ride to the boat. Now does any one suppose that any sane man would make such an outlay as Mr. Dunbar has done, and then not care how the business of such an enterprise was managed afterwards. Common sense would teach any one better. The people of Weymouth should and I believe they do appreciate such a great enterprise as has been started by the Pilgrim Wharf Company and Steamboat Company together.

Weymouth can now boast of a Steamboat wharf, and a steamer making several trips a day to and from Weymouth to Boston. Will the people adapt the uncalled for suggestion of W. N. of putting on a new opposition boat, because he is not so well accommodated as he would like to be. No! they will not. We would state for the information of W. N. that no opposition boat can land at Pilgrim Wharf for two reasons; first because Mr. Dunbar has a lease of it for ten years; secondly the wharf company would not allow it under any consideration whatever. We believe that under the management of such an able and experienced gentleman as T. J. Dunbar, Esq., the public will be accommodated in the best possible manner,—that Weymouth will be greatly benefited by such an enterprise, and the boat will be a perfect success.

G. A. R. Post 40, of No. Weymouth, on Monday evening last, elected the following comrades as officers for the ensuing six months:

F. A. Bicknell, Commander; G. L. Newton, Senior Vice do.; A. P. Beard, Juior Vice do.; J. W. Burr, Adjatant; E. H. Davis, Quartermaster; A. T. Cushing, Surgeon; John Binney, Chaplain; Gen'l Benj. F. Pratt and Major F. A. Bicknell, were elected delegates to the Semi Annual Convention, of the Dept. of Mass., to be held in Boston, at Dept. Headquarters the third Wednesday in July.

POST 91, G. A. R., was organized at Faxborough, on Monday evening last.

The County Commissioners, in an official capacity, viewed the thoroughfare leading from the steamboat Co's wharf, last Tuesday, and decided to straighten and widen and lay out the old county road from the Beach at Great Hill, to Stepping Stone Bridge. A new project was laid before them, to open a new road from the wharf to Athens St., near Mr. Rockwood's church, but as it had not been petitioned for, it could not then be acted on. At some future time, if petitioned for, it may meet with a favorable consideration by the commissioners.

The Selectmen of the town are unanimous in favor of straightening and widening the old road, which would only cost the town about $1500, while the new road as proposed would probably cost about $5,000.

THE SOUTH SHORE HORSE SHOE CLUB, of Old Spain, numbering about twenty members, have been enjoying friendly games at pitching horse shoes, nearly every day for the past month; that is, say about two hours each day. Some very exciting games have been played which have attracted quite a crowd of people to witness the skill and scientific manner in which these experts play the game. Some three weeks since, E. S. Beals, Esq., a very prominent member of the club, proposed that four of the club, two on a side, play a friendly match game. The proposition was accepted,—Henry Newton and James Thomas, Jr., on one side, E. S. Beals and B. P. Thomas on the other. Monday of last week was the day chosen, and preparations made accordingly.

The party selected Long Island, as the pleasantest and most desirable place to go. At eleven o'clock A. M., the contestants went aboard the beautiful steamer Massasoit, at Pilgrim Wharf, and in thirty minutes the party were on the island, The place was soon selected, the distance measured, the hubs driven, coats laid off and the game at once commenced. A very large gathering of people were there to witness the game which was very exciting, each one straining every nerve and muscle to beat his opponent. Thirty-one games were played. H. Newton and J. Thomas, Jr., won 27, to E. S. Beals and B. P. Thomas only 4.

The party then repaired to the Long Island House where suppers had been engaged, and an hour was spent in discussing the eatables, all feeling that they could do justice to such a sumptuous supper as had been prepared for them. The party returned home in the 6 1-4 boat, feeling that a fair game had been played, and that they had a very pleasant time. The party met with a good reception at the island, for which they expressed their hearty thanks.

E. Frank Beals, Esq., of the firm of Mann, Beals & Co., Milwaukie, returned to his home in Old Spain on Wednesday of last week. He will spend a few days at the shore with a party of his friends, having hired the house near the Cold Spring, owned by Messrs. Newton & Randall. No pleasanter situation can be found on the shore, both for its convenience and beautiful scenery.

Mr. Beals will probably purchase very largely of boots and shoes of all kinds before his return, as he came on mostly for that purpose.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

Mr. George Sargent, who was taken to the Worcester Asylum for the Insane, died in that institution from starvation, last week. All efforts to compel him to take nourishment proved unavailing. He was taken home for interment. Funeral services were held in the Universalist Chapel last Sunday. Sermon by Rev. Mr. Baker. Mr. S. was a member of the Odd Fellows, and respect was paid to his remains by about fifty members of the Order, who were present at the funeral.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH, June 29th, 1868.

Mr. Editor:—I have seen several statements in your paper in relation to the accident that I met with June 16, when near Lovell's Corner, and in justice to myself and the many passengers who ride with me, I feel that a plain statement of the facts are necessary.

The way that I was hurt was this: The coach was heavily laden. There were four standing on the steps in the rear, of which number I was one. I was making change with the passengers and giving them their tickets, when a man who wished to go, saw me passing and ran out and sprang upon the steps, unseen by me until he jammed against me, which caused me to lose my balance, when my foot was caught between the shutlock and the wheel.

ACCIDENT AT THE FLAX MILL.—On Monday afternoon, a workman in the flax mill at East Braintree, had an arm badly mangled by being caught in a belt.

ABINGTON.

Dea. R. J. Lane, Superintendent of the East Abington Congregational Sunday School, invited his school to a Strawberry festival at his residence, last Saturday.

FLORAL SUNDAY, The Universalist Church at Abington was beautifully decorated Floral Sunday, June 19th. 11 children were baptised.

There are five Crispin Lodges in Abington and over 1400 members. The semi-annual election of officers took place last week. Mr. J. B. Harris was elected Sir Knight at North Abington, and Col. W. B. White to the same office in the East Abington Lodge.

Travel on the South Shore Rail-road has increased of late. It is time for summer tourists to seek the sea-side, and we are glad to note that the tide begins to set in that direction.

The Legislature has adjourned after a session of 171 days.

The new prohibitory law went into operation Thursday.

The Times says Dr. Walpole has lost his beautiful chestnut mare. She died suddenly in the harness, it is supposed from Bots or Pin worms. If the Dr. had used Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, he would no doubt, have had his mare to-day—they are death on worms.

Chapped Hands are very common with those who have their hands much in water. A few drops of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment rubbed over the hands two or three times a day, will keep them soft and white. Fishermen, sailors, and others will do well to remember this.

We were attracted in Boston, in passing up Washington St., by a large number of boxes piled up in front of No. 55. On a further examination we found them to be the popular and healthful game of croquet, and when we found that a handsome and strong set could be bought for about $4, we at once invested, and we advise our readers to 'go and do likewise'. Be sure to go to the Croquet Headquarters, D. B. Brooks & Bro.

Health and Wealth.
Health depends upon keeping our systems in proper tone. We often need the aid of tonics to do so. Speer's "Standard Wine Bitters," according to the opinion of our best and most successful Medical Practitioners are the desideratum so long sought after by the profession.—Try them and be convinced. Sold by Druggists.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup.
Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills will cure Consumption, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, if taken according to directions. They are all three to be taken at the same time. They cleanse the stomach, relax the liver and put it to work; then the appetite becomes good; the food digests and makes good blood; the patient begins to grow in flesh; the diseased matter ripens in the lungs, and the patient outgrows the disease and gets well. This is the only way to cure consumption.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary Consumption. The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs, nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, and the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To do this, the Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver, so that the Pulmonic Syrup and the food will make good blood.

Schenck's Mandrake Pills act upon the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the ducts of the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved; the stools will show what the Pills can do; nothing has ever been invented except calomel (a deadly poison which is very dangerous to use unless with great care,) that will unlock the gall bladder and start the secretions of the liver like Schenck's Mandrake Pills.

Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative, and the alkali in the Seaweed, which this preparation is made of, assists the stomach to throw out the gastric juice to dissolve the food with the Pulmonic Syrup, and it is made into good blood without fermentation or souring in the stomach.

The great reason why physicians do not cure Consumption is, they try to do too much; they give medicines to stop the cough, to stop chills, to stop night sweats, hectic fever, and by so doing they derange the whole digestive powers, locking up the secretions, and eventually the patient sinks and dies.

Dr. Schenck, in his treatment, does not try to stop a cough, night sweats, chills or fever. Remove the cause, and they will all stop of their own accord. No one can be cured of Consumption, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Canker, Ulcerated Throat, unless the liver and stomach are made healthy.

When there is no lung disease and only Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are sufficient, without the Pulmonic Syrup. Take the Mandrake Pills freely in all billious complaints, as they are perfectly harmless.

If a person has consumption, of course the lungs in some way are diseased, either tubercles, abscesses, bronchial irritation, pleura adhesion, or the lungs are a mass of inflammation and fast decaying. In such cases what must be done? It is not only the lungs that are wasting, but it is the whole body. The stomach and liver have lost their power to make blood out of food. Now the only chance is to take Dr. Schenck's three medicines, which will bring up a tone to the stomach, the patient will begin to want food, it will digest easily and make good blood: then the patient begins to gain in flesh, and as soon as the body begins to grow, the lungs commence to heal up, and the patient gets fleshy and well. This is the only way to cure Consumption.

Dr. Schenck, who has enjoyed uninterrupted health for many years past, and now weighs 225 pounds, was wasted away to a mere skeleton in the very last stage of Pulmonary Consumption, his physicians having pronounced his case hopeless and abandoned him to his fate. He was cured by the aforesaid medicines, and since his recovery many thousands similarly afflicted have used Dr. Schenck's preparations with the same remarkable success. Full directions accompany each, making it not absolutely necessary to personally see Dr. Schenck, unless patients wish their lungs examined, and for this purpose he is professionally at his Principal Office, Philadelphia, every Saturday, where all letters for advice must be addressed. He is also professionally at No. 32 Bond Street, New York, every other Tuesday, and at No. 35 Hanover Street, Boston, every other Wednesday. He gives advice free, but for a thorough examination with his Respirometer the price is $5. Office hours at each city from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Price of the Pulmonic Syrup and Seaweed Tonic each $1.50 per bottle, or $7.50 a half dozen. Mandrake Pills 25 cents a box. G. C. GOODWIN & CO., 38 Hanover St., Boston, Wholesale agents. For sale by all druggists.

PERRY DAVIS' Vegetable Pain Killer. We clip the following from the Providence General Advertiser. "At this season of the year, when cholera, cholera morbus, dysentery, and other kindred complaints are sure to prevail, everybody should be liberally supplied with the Pain Killer. Persons leaving home, whether it be for a day's excursion or a trip to Europe, should be in a condition to place their hands on it at a moment's warning. Many diseases incident to the summer months which will prove fatal if not immediately checked, can be promptly cured by one or two doses of the Pain Killer. On more than one occasion have we been relieved of intense suffering by the timely use of the above named preparation." Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Medicine Dealers. 9-12

A Large Business
The firm of J. W. RAND & Co., who occupy the new granite building directly opposite the Court House, Boston, are probably the largest dealers in their line of business in the New England States. Their spacious and elegant store, one of the finest in the city, is arranged in three departments, comprising the business of Hats, Caps, Furs,—Trunks, Valises, Bags,—Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods. In
is found the Gentlemen's Dress Hat in all styles. The young man's nobby Felt or Straw Hat, and the neat and tasty Hat or Cap for youth's wear, also Panama and Straw Hats of every shape.
DEPARTMENT B
comprises the largest assortment of Trunks. Travelling and Shopping Bags in the State, including the Sole Leather, Saratoga, Patent Excelsior, and Bureau Trunk, also Gents' Railroad and Ladies Shopping Bags of many kinds.
DEPARTMENT C
is especially arranged for the business of Gentlemen's Furnishing goods, Shirts, Hosiery, Gloves, Ties, Under Garments, &c. Their "Balance Yoke Shirt," (the patterns of which are secured by letters patent,) is claimed with justice as the best fitting shirt in the country.
This establishment is one of the most popular places of resort in Boston, and its great success is the result of business tact, gentlemanly clerks and low prices. 6-9

DODD'S NERVINE DID IT.
NEW LONDON, CONN., April 26, 1869.
REMEMBERED FRIEND—I thought it well to wait another week before writing, to see if I continued to improve, as I have been doing for some time, under the treatment of the new medicine, and I am happy to tell you that I am getting better—even faster than when you were here. I commenced the use of DODD'S NERVINE without anybody advising me to it. When I began with it I could only walk from my bed to the chair. My trouble has been extreme pain in the head, and has lasted over three years. All the medicine I have taken heretofore taken has failed to give any relief. I am now able to go up and down stairs, and daily improving. I consider the NERVINE the best medicine I ever found, and shall continue its use, for I am confident of entire recovery. I have taken only three bottles, and would not be without it on any account.
Very truly, MRS. I. S. NUTE. 7-10

A LETTER
From Dr. Connacher
To Dr. Wolcott.
Dear Sir: A Man
Called on me last night
To visit a sick woman,
Who was not expected
To live till morning
Several physicians
Had attended her,
And yesterday the Priest
Visited her for the last time.
She had been confined
Five weeks before my visit.
I found the room
Where she lay crowded
With Men and Women
Watching for her to die.
She was so low
She could not speak
Only in Whispers,
And very weak.

She had severe inflammation of the Bowels. I applied PAIN PAINT freely, and in less than fifteen minutes every particle of Pain was gone. Another TRIUMPH for your PAIN PAINT. Her flesh was nearly raw from repeated applications of Mustard Plasters. They purchased a $5 bottle of PAIN PAINT and she is doing well, and out of Danger. I had just got home, and nearly asleep, when another persons came after me wanting relief for his Wife, who had toothache. She was cured instantly by applying PAIN PAINT freely to the outside of her face. Last Monday night a gentleman who keeps a Livery Stable here called on me to visit his Wife, who has been suffering for a long time with Liver Complaint, Cough, and a host of troubles, the result of Catarrh. Every Physician in this town has practiced on her, but always left her worse. The Bottles that had contained the Drugs she had swallowed would fill a large Dry Goods Box. In her case I used both PAIN PAINT and ANNIHILATOR; in a few minutes she was entirely relieved of all pain, and could talk in longer breaths than she had done in many months. She bought a pint of PAIN PAINT and a pint of the ANNIHILATOR, and is recovering her health rapidly. I could send you a hundred cases where I have used your Remedies for Pain, Sickness, and Diseases, which had baffled all the skill of Medical Practioners, that have fully recovered by your simple and harmless Remedies, by my recommendations, and for whom I have prescribed.

A Baptist Clergyman here in Hyde Park is an enthusiastic admirer of PAIN PAINT, and wants to get one of your Charts to hang up in his library. He thinks PAIN PAINT is the greatest thing ever known. I shall go to Pittston in a few days and will write you again more particulars. I cannot close without sending you a sworn affidavit, handed to me by a gentleman residing in Wilkesbarre, Penn., to whom I applied PAIN PAINT with astonishing success.
DR. J. CONNACHER.

SCRANTON, PA., May 12th, 1869.
On Friday, April 30, I was suddenly taken with rheumatism in my back, so that I was unable to leave my bed. On Monday, May 3, Dr. Connacher was sent for; with great pain and difficulty, I turned over in bed to have him Paint my back. In less than three minutes I arose and dressed myself and went down stairs. I felt no more pain and but little soreness; I walked all around the public square and to the Bristol House in less than twenty minutes from the first application of Pain Paint. I am now free from all pain, and can be seen any day at the fruit and confectionery store on Main Street, near the public square. Wilkesbarre, Penn., May 5, 1869.
SAMUEL BUZINE.
Sworn and subscribed before me the 5th of May, 1869.
E B. HARVY, Justice of the Peace, Wilkesbarre, Penn.

Dr. R. L WOLCOTT, of 181 Chatham Square, N. Y., has more patients than any Hospital in the world. He discards all dosing, and removes pain, free of cost, at his office. His Pain Paint, for Pain, and Annihilator, for Catarrh and Weak Nerves, is sold at all Drug Stores. He charges nothing for advice, and sends to any person his Remedies, free of express charges, on receipt of $5 at each order. Therefore none need be deceived by counterfeits. He uses only White Wrappers. 7-10

To the County Commissioners for the County of Norfolk:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that the public convenience and wants require that a road and Highway should be laid out and constructed, beginning near the house of John Lincoln, on the Jerusalem Road, in the town of Cohasset, and leading northerly to the easterly end of Straits Pond.

Your petitioners would therefore ask your Honors to view the premises and locate and construct said road and Highway according to the laws made and provided in such cases.

And your petitioners in duty bound will ever pray.

JAMES ANDERSON, and 10 others.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

NORFOLK, ss. At a meeting of the County Commissioners, begun and held at Dedham, within and for said County of Norfolk, on the twenty-first day of May, A. D., 1869, by adjournment of the April meeting next preceding.

On the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, that the County Commissioners will meet at the House of Abiah A. Baker, in Cohasset, in said County, on Monday the twelfth day July, A. D., 1869, at one o'clock P. M., and thence proceed to view the route described in said petition, and hear and act thereon.

And that an attested copy of said petition, with this order thereon, be served upon the Clerk of the Town of Cohasset, thirty days at least before the time appointed for said view, and also that a like copy be published three weeks successively in the Weymouth Gazette, a newspaper printed at Weymouth, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before said view, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in said Cohasset, fourteen days at least before said view, that all persons and corporations interested for or against said petition may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.

ERASTUS WORTHINGTON, Clerk.

FOUTZ'S

CELEBRATED

HORSE AND CATTLE POWDERS.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly revivigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE, AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk, and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet.

In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

PIQUANTS.

Mr. Glumm confesses to have got struck for once in his life. The other night in the dark he mistook his mucilage bottle for the hair oil. His hair has since presented the appearance of whalebone,

A writer, describing one of the engagements in the late war, gives the following interesting item: 'In the battle we lost the brave Captain Smith. A cannon ball took off his head. His last words were, 'Bury me on the spot where I fell.'

A young Cincinnati dentist was introduced to a fashionable beauty the other evening, and gracefully opened the conversation by saying: 'Miss——, I hope that I may consider that we are not entirely unacquainted. I had the pleasure of pulling a tooth for your father only a short time ago.'

At a late printer's festival the following toast was presented: 'The master of all trades; he beats the farmer with the Hoe, the carpenter with his rules and the mason with setting up tall columns; he surpasses the lawyer and the doctor in attending to his cases; and he beats the parson in the management of the devil.

Sir Walter Scott was, in one of his walks, leaning on the arm of his faithful attendant, Tom Purdie. Tom said, 'Them are fine novels of yours, Sir Walter; they are just invaluable to me.' 'I'm glad to hear it, Tom.' 'Yes, sir, for when I've been out all day hard at work, and come home very tired, and take up one o' your novels, I'm asleep directly.'

After a snow storm last winter the following was perpetrated by a new beginner in poetry:

'Softly, softly while we slept,
Came the snow-flakes slowly down;
Came and sorrowfully wove
A shroud of white for the buried town;
We rose with feelings grand and intense,
And hired a middle-aged Anglo-African shovelist to clear our sidewalk off for fifty cents.'

A short man became attached to a tall woman, and somebody said he had fallen in love with her. Do you call it falling in love? said the suitor; It's more like climbing up to it.

The latest undergraduate joke at Yale College was the transfer, by midnight, of a florist's sign—'New Haven Nursery' to a conspicuous position on a flourishing young ladies' seminary.

My dear, do you know that your husband told me last night that my checks were like roses? Yes, love, I know he did. He spoke of it afterward, and said it was a pity they were yellow roses.

Jane, said a wag, it's all over town! What's all over town? Mud! Jane's eyes dropped.

Why is an errand-boy like an old horse put up at auction? Because he'll go for what he'll fetch.

Some one engaged upon statistics avers that single women have head ache more than married ones.

If brooks are, as poets call them, the most joyous things in nature, what are they 'murmuring' about?

The world always receives talent with open arms, but often doesn't know what to do with genius.

He is an admirable man who has as much wit as if he had no sense, and as much sense as if he had no wit.

A man living near New York, cut his throat the other day because his wife wanted so many new dresses.

To-morrow has no overflow to atone for the loss of yesterday.

A little fellow having been much praised for quickness of reply, a gentleman present observed that when people were smart in their youth, they were generally very stupid when they advanced in years, and vica versa. 'What a sensible boy, sir, you must have been?' returned the child.

Nineteen dresses in three weeks, and she said last night that she could not go to supper, because she had not a rag to her back! What did Gussy say? Why, that he could not either, he had no coat to his stomach.

Bobby, my love, said a silly mother to her darling, whom she had been cramming with tarts and other good things, can you eat any more? Why, y-e-s, mamma, was young hopeful's hesitating reply, I think I could if I stood up.

If you were to have a horse shod which had you rather pay five dollars for the job, or give one penny for the first nail, two for the next, and so on, doubling the amount each nail, allowing thirty-two nails for the four feet? Try and see.

Many young men are so improvident they cannot keep anything but late hours.

An irreverent country editor, speaking of the effect of Parepa's voice in the monster Coliseum at the Jubilee, said that "she was evidently built for the occasion."

Honor the aged, resdect your inferiors, and love all men.

TO MANUFACTURERS, FOR THE WEST AND SOUTH.—The town of Alliance, Ohio, offers the following advantages: A superior Coal at $2 25 per ton, delivered; Hard Wood Timber, Brick, Lime, Fire and Pottery Clay in abundance. Railroad, Lake, and River Shipping Facilities equal to any interior town in Ohio. Alliance is a rapidly growing and beautiful town, 84 miles from Pittsburgh and 56 from Cleveland, with two flourishing Colleges, a new first-class Opera house, and surrounded by a well-developed farming country for supplying a large population of operatives. Letters of inquiry should be addressed to E. TEETERS, Chain Manufacturing Company. 9-12

Mercantile Savings Institution,
No. 48 Summer, Corner of Arch St., Boston.

ALL money deposited in this institution commences drawing interest on the first of each and every month. Interest is paid on every full calender month the money remains in bank, thereby securing to the depositor an average rate of interest exceeding that paid by any other Savings Institution.. All deposits, with the interest accruing thereon, are secured by a guarantee fund of $300 000. 9-12

☞ AGENTS. The Pacific Railroad opened. Seven days from New York to San Francisco, and now a new interest is felt in the Great West by everybody.

The Old West as it was and the New West as it is are fully described in our new edition of

The attention of reflecting invalids is invited to the following observations. The questions are such as the sick would be likely to ask: the replies are simple facts clothed in language that everybody can understand.

WHY

is Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient adapted to the cure of Indigestion and its concomitants?

BECAUSE

It tones the membranes of the stomach and promotes the secretion of the gastric juice, the solvent which converts the food into a life-sustaining agent; and also because it relieves the bowels without weakening them, and moderately stimulates the bile-producing organ.

WHY

is it recommended for obstructions in the kidneys and other renal diseases, and for dropsy?

BECAUSE

it combines the properties of a mild diuretic & sudorific with those of a local and general invigorant, and by promoting perspiration relieves the blood of a large amount of morbid matter which would otherwise vitiate the secretions.

WHY

is it prescribed for rheumatism, and claimed to be eminently beneficial in all the varieties of that disease?

BECAUSE

rheumatism is caused by the inflamatory action of acid in the blood upon the fibres, membranes and ligaments; and the salines of the Seltzer Aperient being absorbed into the veinous system tend to neutralize the vitiating principle.

is it given by the faculty in all disorders of a febrile character?

BECAUSE

it opens the pores, reduces the temperature of the body, calms the nerves, and acts as a moderate evacuant, and has a refreshing effect upon the whole system. Of all fever drinks it is the most cooling and delightful.

In this brief summary of the virtues of Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient, nothing is set forth which is not justified by testimony of competent medical men. 9-12

Grace Waldron,

—OR—

THE FALSE DAUGHTER.

A TALE OF NEW YORK.

CHAPTER XV.

Victor Stanhope after he was exchanged, returned at once to his regiment. There he found a few letters from Edward Morton written previous to his capture, but containing nothing to alarm him, but he also heard from Colonel Bland in regard to the note and package sent to Grace Waldron, and as soon as possible he obtained a furlough. He had missed one letter from Edward announcing his marriage with Rosa Ingersol, and another relating the fact with which the reader was made acquainted in the previous chapter. It was not till after his arrival in New York that Victor learned the meaning of, and the sequel to the old womans story. Another important disclosure also awaited him.

The afternoon that Victor left his regiment for New York Edward Morton (who it will be remembered, still occupied the same office which had been the business office of Walter Stanhope, the banker) being away from his office, his two clerks were idly striving to kill dull time. "Bill," said Frank Warren to his fellow clerk, "this is deuced stupid, let's gamble a little. I have got half a dozen pennies; I'll toss pennies with you. Now here goes—head or tail?" "Head," said the other, and the coin was snapped from between Frank Warren's thumb and forefinger. It struck the floor and rolled away till it finally fell into a crack between the hearth stone and the floor. "Well, that is neither head nor tail," said Frank Warren laughing, "but we will get the penny and try again." But this he did not find it so easy to do. After two or three attempts to pry the coin from the crack, he exclaimed, "this hearth stone is loose, and I will take it up. Hand me that poker." After one or two ineffectual attempts, and some pinching of fingers the stone was raised and the penny recovered. But something of much greater consequence was thus by the merest accident apparently, brought to light. The marble hearth stone had been the cover for a square hole or rather a box of solid granite, in which just fitted a solid iron chest with two rings or handles, and the two young men stood wondering who put it there and what it could possibly contain when the employer entered the office.

"Frank, what have you got there?" he asked as he caught sight of the chest and the open hearth. "That is just what I should like to know myself. I lost a penny in the crack by the hearth and pried up the stone to get it and found this box. "But see, here are some letters on it," and he brushed away the dust. "W. S." that must mean Walter Stanhope. Frank if you have as I hope and believe, found the papers left by Mr. Walter Stanhope, and for which such search has been made, you have discovered a fortune."

At the time of Walter Stanhope's death a peculiar shaped key had been found among his effects which fitted no lock to any article he was known to possess, and Edward Morton had always believed that key would eventually unlock the secret of Victor Stanhope's birth and parentage, and so it proved, for the key was found to fit the lock of the iron chest, and when that chest was opened before the proper witnesses, the truth in regard to Victor Stanhope came out. Letters addressed to him by his guardian showed that Victor was the son of a sister of Stanhope, who having contracted a marriage against the wishes of her family had after losing her husband, and when death was claiming her sent for her brother Walter, the only relative who had witnessed her marriage, and with her dying breath implored him to take her boy. Walter Stanhope's will was there also, signed, sealed and witnessed, and made with such care there was no chance for the slightest legal quibble over it, and it was found that save some legacies and a gift of two thousand dollars to Edward Morton, the whole of the banker's vast property was left to his adopted son, his nephew Victor.

All this Victor Stanhope learned when he learned too of the loss or disappearance of Grace Waldron, and little he cared for name or fortune without her. Unlike the world in general, unlike even Grace herself, when his sorrows first came to him, the loss of name and fortune she had now met, made him all the more anxious to find her and shield her. He sought an interview with Mr. Waldron, but from him he could gather nothing as to where Grace was, nor in fact who she was, for Mrs. Waldron was unable to even if she had been willing to disclose where she had obtained the child who had so many years been known as Frederic Waldron's daughter.

The search for Grace Waldron by those who loved her, was in vain, but one evening Harry Liston, the one person she most had cause to dread, discovered her. He was on some graceless errand in deserted streets leading from the Bowery, when a female figure passed him. He was a libertine as well as a gambler, and the queenly step of the one that passed him, attracted his attention, and he followed her. "Excuse me Miss," he said as he joined her, "but this is a lonesome place to be walking alone—allow me to see you home." Her veil was closely drawn so that Liston could not see her face, but the voice he recognised as the unknown spoke. "Sir, I have no fear of insult except from you. I will thank you to leave me."

"Aha! my lovely Grace, I have found you at last. Oh! you keep your sweet face covered, but that voice is not to be forgotten, and I know the false daughter of Frederic Waldron. You should not shun me. True, I sought you when I thought you rich to patch up my fortunes. Now the tables have turned, and I can offer you a home—if not a name."

"Leave me, leave me at once, you miserable apology for a man. Leave me, as you had a mother once, the memory of whom should make you respect a defenceless woman. You would trace me to my home—but from this spot, I do not stir till you are far away."

He grasped her arm, but she wrenched it from his grasp, and a policeman passing across the street Harry Liston, fearing she might call to him, was obliged to let the prize slip through his fingers. But he followed her though she did not suspect it, and marked the house she entered. When Grace Waldron left her home, she had no aim, end nor object, save to escape from the false position she had for so many years occupied. Fortunately, though not unusual she had a considerable sum in her portemonnaie which supported her till she obtained some employment sufficient to sustain her in the closest seclusion, and feeling as certain that she was not Frederic Waldron's child as though the proofs had been shown her she had eluded all search till Harry Liston's accidental discovery. Then she felt that she must again change her abode for she knew he would haunt the neighborhood till he ascertained where she lived.

Captain Stanhope when he left his regiment, as every other man who returned home for a season, was the bearer of numerous letters and messages, from officers, and in his case from some of the privates too, of his company. As he set in Edward Morton's office quite late one afternoon he took some papers from his pocket, and found a letter from one of his men to his wife, which he had promised to have delivered, together with a small amount of money. So many other unsuspected matters however had engrossed his attention, he had entirely overlooked the letter till reminded of his duty by seeing it. He looked up intending to request one of the clerks to deliver it for him, but they had both left for home, so he concluded he would take a walk across the city and deliver it himself.

"Morton," said he, "I find I have neglected a duty and am going to punish myself by leaving you, when I want very much to stay and talk with you, and will carry this letter and some money to a soldier's wife, and will make myself your guest this evening. This sword of mine," he added, "is a nuisance, and I believe I will take it off and leave it till tomorrow," and he prepared to do so.

"Oh! dont do that," said Morton, "if you are coming to my house; bring it with you to show Rosa the sword which fought its way to Richmond."

It was late when Victor left Morton's office, and he then stopped for a supper on his way so that "the shades of night were falling fast" as he wended his way to the home of the woman to whom he was to deliver the letter. He found the right house and the right room, and after delivering the letter and money, was speaking some kindly encouraging words to the woman in regard to her husband, when he heard the sound of hurrying feet upon the stairs above, a cry for help and almost immediately a young woman burst open the door, followed closely by a person dressed like a gentleman. All passed so quickly that in the dim uncertain light, Stanhope had no opportunity to notice either of the intruders, but he knew a woman's cry for help, and stepping between the pursued one and her pursuer, and drawing his sword he exclaimed, 'Sir, I don't know the meaning of this disturbance, but this girl evidently does not wish for your company—leave her'—and as the other seemed inclined to argue the point, he struck him on the breast with the flat of his sword a blow which made the steel ring. Harry Liston, for it was he, obeyed for there was that about the voice and the eye, of Captain Stanhope, which intimated he meant what he said. He had followed Grace Waldron as she feared he would, had persecuted her with persuasion and had finally attempted to force her to his will. Grace had occupied a room over the one in which the woman Stanhope had come to see, lived, and when threatened by Harry Liston, she rushed down the stairs and sought the first haven of protection.

Victor Stanhope turned to her after her assailant left, and the walls of that room rung, as he recognised her, and caught her to his heart. "Grace, my own, my own! I have found you at last. Oh! Grace, I thought you lost to me forever, but now nothing shall part us," and he pressed her to his heart, and showered kisses on brow, cheek and lips. The meeting was so unexpected, that Captain Victor Stanhope, who on the field of battle could be as cool as ice, was almost crazy.

He hurried Grace, after sending the astonished Mrs. Jones up stairs for her outer garments, down the stairs and through the streets till he found a carriage, and all Grace could realize was that an arm was around her to protect her from all harm, and that the heart against which she rested was all her own. Edward Morton was sitting with his wife in their quiet parlor, and the coachman's quiet ring was thought by both to be their expected visitor. The door opened and he did make his appearance but leading, almost carrying in his arms Grace Waldron. "Morton," he exclaimed, "I have found her and brought her here because she must not be lost to me again, and your wife will take care of her. Do not ask me to explain now. I have found my treasure, and I beg you to take charge of it."

Of course Edward Morton and his wife could not at all understand the circumstances which led to this sudden demand upon their hospitality, but both comprehended at once, why Victor had brought her to them, instead of carrying her to her late home, and Mrs. Morton said kindly as she took Grace by the hand, "dear Grace, I cannot tell how glad I am to have you with me. You must make this your home for the present, for I know your absence has nearly broken more than one heart."

Grace yielded like a bewildered child and allowed Mrs. Morton to lead her from the room, and then Edward Morton heard how and where Victor had found her.

At the same time Rosa Morton, with the intention of cheering her guest, was relating the story of Victor Stanhope's captivity and release as she had heard it from her husband, and painting in glowing colors his glorious career in the army, but when she told of the discovery of his real connection with the wealthy banker, Grace covered her face and burst into tears, as she realized the vast distance between his position and hers, and had it been possible she would again have escaped from those whose wishes were only for her happiness. Victor Stanhope knowing how much she had suffered, did not ask to see her again that evening, but very early the next morning he awoke to a sense of perfect bliss. His name, cleared from every shadow of doubt, an ample fortune, and his brilliant record in the army, these he could now lay at the feet of her whom he had so worshipped, and that her circumstances were changed did not enter his thoughts. To him she was the same decked with diamonds, or in the simplest dress earning her own living, and too impatient for ceremony he was at Edward Morton's house before his family had done their breakfast. Grace was very quiet, very sad, but Victor thought she had never appeared so lovely as now, that there was nothing to prevent his claiming her hand. When she rose to leave the room he took her hand and led her to the drawing-room. She made an effort to draw herself away from his encircling arm but he held her fast. "Grace," he said, "I have loved you a long, long while and now my greatest happiness in my newly found fortune and position is that I have you to share it with me." But she shrank from his embrace, and answered him. "Captain Stanhope, I cannot accept your generous offer, nor forget that I am not what you suppose me to be. When I deemed myself your superior in station, I treated you with bitter scorn, and now that our positions are reversed, and you are raised far above the poor, penniless and nameless girl, she must remind you of the change. You know not what you ask, and ere long you will thank her that she has done so. With all my heart I rejoice at your good fortune, and hope you may find some one more worthy far than I to share it with you." "I thank you very much, and perhaps you will kindly assist me in my search," returned he with a bright smile which she did not see, and then he added with great earnestness, "Grace, your pride separated us once—perhaps it was for the best, but you owned even then you loved me and now I cannot, will not give you up. The changes in my fortune and in yours, but prove the heartless folly of the world, which judges merit by the outside display not by the innate worth; they cannot change my love for you. I have suffered the carping criticism of society and felt the chill of reverse, and I care for neither, and if I rejoice that I own now an untarnished name, it is because you will wear it. You have called yourself nameless—you are to be so no more, none but you can dictate my choice, no one will dare to question its propriety. But one thing can separate us; tell me you do not love me, tell me there was no meaning in the gift I bore through the dangers of the field, and I must yield you up and curse the hour which brought me back to life. Grace, can you tell me that?" "Oh, Victor, Victor, you are unkind. Love you! Oh! I must not think of it; ere long you would regret taking as your wife one who"—but that was all she said, for Victor Stanhope closed her lips with a kiss, and clasped her in his arms, till she forgot all except that he whom she had so loved and so mourned was by her side, his arm around her—hers forever. Very carefully and very tenderly did he allude then to her former life, and convinced her it was proper she should at once return to the home of him who would never cease to regard her as his child. Edward Morton and his wife, who had exercised exemplary patience, were delighted when calling them into the room, Victor Stanhope said, leading Grace to them, "I wish to leave my future wife in your care for a few hours."

The meeting between father and daughter was a painful yet a joyous one. Mr. Waldron insisted on still calling her and recognizing her as his child and taking her home, where Florence received her with a love deeper than an own sister could have felt, and when a loving confidence had grown up between them and they could speak calmly of the past history of both, Florence would say, "dear Grace, this is your home and I am but a dear friend visiting you." And Grace Waldron had but one cause for uneasiness or unhappiness, the impossibility of ascertaining who she really was.

Time cleared away that mystery, by restoring Mrs. Waldron to her right mind. A celebrated physician was made acquainted with the whole history of her case, and he suggested that her husband and brother should be brought together in her presence, in the almost vain hope that something in the connection of those two with the past, might carry her mind back and restore her reason. The experiment was successful. At first she recognised neither of them, but Eugene Liston affecting a calmness he was far from feeling, said, "Floy, dear Floy, it is a long while since we have met; do you remember your brother Eugene?" It was a moment of painful anxiety till with a look of intelligence she sprang towards him exclaiming, "Eugene, dear, dear Eugene—but," and their hopes had very nearly been again forever crushed, she added with a look of intense loathing at her husband, "what is that man here for." And Frederic Waldron hastened from the apartment. God in heaven only knows with what patience, with what gentleness Eugene Liston worked for hours, to fan the feeble spark of returning reason, till he could make his sister listen to, and comprehend the story of the past. Gently, oh! how gently he led her reason back over the fearful blank of years, and when the poor weak mind did faintly comprehend all the misery it had caused, the brother's only fear was, that the mind had been restored but to destroy the body. She lived however, lived to pardon her husband and to beg his forgiveness; lived to see the daughter for whose sake she had toiled and suffered, assume her rightful place; lived to confirm the worst fears of the one she had placed in a false position, for when Grace Waldron was told who her parents were, she found them to be poor, and what was worse, degraded—her real father a dissipated, wretched man, and her mother his fit companion. Oh! pride beware. We do not have our choice of birth, but we can mold our future for good or evil, and therefore let not name nor fortune, which may be snatched away in a moment, but in truth and honor fulfilling every duty, be our standard of nobility.

Grace Waldron keenly felt the disgraceful connection and would have gone to her real parents, but Victor Stanhope, not from pride but from principle insisted she should not. "Were it a duty Grace," he said, "I could not object, but they gave you up, taking no interest in your welfare, and they are not aware even of your existence. The command 'honor thy father and thy mother" you are absolved from by their acts in that they took no care for you and as my wife, dearest, whether you were princess or peasant you must be satisfied to be as I am to have you—nobody's daughter."

And thus it was, and when in after years the memory of her real parents would sometimes cast a shadow over her otherwise perfect happiness, a glance at her husband, who never failed to read her thoughts, would be answered with such a look of perfect, devoted love, that she knew he had never regretted his choice.

THE END.

MINNESOTA: ITS ADVANTAGES TO SETTLERS.

The territory comprising the present state of Minnesota was discovered in 1680 by a Franciscan priest named Hennepen; yet with the exception of a few pioneer hunters and traders, no settlement was made until about twenty-five years ago, and in 1849 the present city of St. Paul contained a population of 840. At the present time the population is 20,108. Minnesota was admitted into the Union in 1858. With a population of 175,000 at the beginning of the war she furnished 24,000 men to the Union armies. Being a new state, she had no surplus population, and her quotas were filled from her grain fields, workshops and pineries. By the Homestead Laws of Minnesota any resident of the state may own 80 acres of land with the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances, not included in any incorporated town, city or village, or instead thereof, a quantity of land not exceeding one lot in any incorporated town, city or village and the dwelling house and its appurtenances, which shall not be subject to attachment, levy or sale, upon any execution or any other process issued out of any court within the state.

It will be seen that there is no limitation as to the value of the farm or residence thus secured to the family. It may be worth one thousand or ten thousand dollars. Whatever it is it remains the shelter, the castle, the home of the family, to cluster around its hearthstone in the hour of gloom and disaster, as securely as they were wont to do in the sunshine of prosperity. In addition to the house, there is also exempted a proportionately liberal amount of personal property, consisting of household furniture, library, horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, wagons, farming tools, provisions, grain, fuel, &c., also all the tools and instruments of any mechanics, and four hundred dollars worth of stock in trade; also the library and implements of any professional man.

The Homestead laws of the United States provide that any person by a five years residence, and paying the sum of ten dollars and the fees of the land officers, becomes the owner of 160 acres of land, provided he be a citizen of the United States or has declared his intention of becoming such, and no land acquired under the provisions of this act shall become liable for any debts contracted prior to the issuance of the patent therefor.

The general surface of the greater part of the state is even and undulating and pleasantly diversified with rolling prairies, vast belts of timber, oak openings numerous lakes and streams, with their accompanying meadows, waterfalls, wooded ravines and lofty bluffs, which impart variety, grandeur and picturesque beauty to its scenery. The great Mississippi river, 2400 miles long, rises in lake Itasca in the northern part of the state, and flows southeasterly through the state for a distance of 797 miles. It is navigable for large vessels to St Paul, and above the falls of St Anthony, for smaller boats for above 150 miles further. Among the other large rivers are the Minnesota, flowing through the state a distance of 500 miles, the St Croix 130 miles, the Red river 380 miles, besides which there are many others from 50 to 100 miles in length. Many of the brooks, with deep cut channels, full of trout, leap and dance merrily over the prairies, often taking sudden leaps, forming beautiful and romantic caseades. Besides Lake Superior, the largest body of fresh water on the globe, and which forms the eastern boundary of Minnesota, the whole surface of the state is literally begemmed with innumerable lakes, estimated at 10,000. They are of all sizes from 500 yards in diameter to 10 miles. Their picturesque beauty and lovliness, with their pebbly bottoms, transparent waters, wooded shores and sylvan associations, must be seen to be appreciated. They abound in fish of superior quality and flavor; and in the fall and spring they are the haunts of innumerable ducks, geese and other wild fowl. These lakes act as reservoirs for water, penetrating the soil and by their exhalations giving rise to summer showers during dry weather. Prof. Maury says of Minnesota, that although far from the sea "it may be considered the best watered state in the Union, and it doubtless owes its abundance of summer rains to the lake system.

In the northern part of the state is an immense forest region of upwards of 21,000 square miles, constituting one of the great sources of health and industry of the state. West of the Mississippi is the Big Woods, about 100 miles long and 40 miles wide. The lumber trade of the state is constantly increasing and the Lake Superior and Mississippi river railroad running as it will through our immense lumber district, will greatly add to it. The amount of logs and lumber cut and manufactured at the falls of St. Anthony, and the St. Croix, in 1868 reaches nearly 400,000,000 feet!

The mineral deposits are another important source of wealth. Among the minerals found are copper and iron, coal, gold and silver, granite and limestone. Numerous very pure salt springs abound in the Red river valley. But the richest mines of wealth, belonging to any state is a productive soil, and in this Minnesota is unequaled. There is a mine of gold on every farm of 160 acres, and it requires no capital to work it but industry.

MARRIAGE BROKERAGE IN PARIS.

SPENDTHRIFTS who have squandered their fortunes, and need a dowry to replace them, can read in the Paris papers an advertisement of a handsome, modest and amiable young lady, with an income of 50,000 francs a year. They hasten to write, and two days after receive a response, and with a hand trembling with emotion they open this Cupid's missive, which says such business cannot be done by correspondence, and begs them to call at his "bureau," assuring them that their's being the first communication, they will have the preference. They imagine the fortune already theirs. The "bureau" is generally situated in a very fine house. A valet in livery introduces you into a magnificent saloon, ornamented with exquisite taste, from whose open doors you perceive a succession of rich apartments. Here Cupid reigns supreme. All the paintings, statuettes and books are devoted to this god. Two pretty children (hired, without doubt), are playing in the room. After being kept waiting a short time, the broker appears, and excuses himself, upon the plea of business, for making you wait; after which he rings, and with an insinuating smile, begs to offer you a glass of wine. When the same valet appears he expresses his astonishment at seeing him perform this service, and demands, with an angry air, where is Pierre, Antoine, Francois. He answers without hesitation—one has gone to the bank, another to the opera to engage a "loge" for madame, and the third for the affair of the count. This deception is intended to make an impression. The valet is the only servant of the establishment, and is even the father of the children in the saloon. This is only the prologue—now the comedy commences.

Monsieur, I have had the honor of addressing you in answer to the advertisement. When can I be presented to this lady? You are without profession? Yes—she is honorable then? Your antecedents? You shall be informed of them. The conversation continues thus, in order that the broker may form an idea of the degree of intelligence of his victim and what precautions to take to prevent compromising himself. I shall expect only five per cent. upon the dowry. Very well. Payable when you receive it. Admirable. But before going further the broker demands the fees of the "bureau" for expenses incurred in making inquiries, &c., which vary according to the credulity of the visitor and the amount of the dowry. He asks 400 francs, adding that with 100 more you will have the right of choosing for six months from all the ladies in my establishment. Such a tempting offer could not be resisted—so the applicant gives the 500 francs—500 francs. In exchange for his money he receives a receipt upon stamped paper—with the terms of the agreement—for which he must pay 10 francs extra—510 francs.

He waits with impatience the moment of the first interview. At last the broker presents him. They are mutually pleased, and after a short interchange of compliments they leave the room. He wishes to escort them to their carriage; this the broker prevents, as they belong to the establishment, being hired for five francs per day, and the elegant dresses and articles of the toilet necessary for their transformation, (for they are blondes or brunettes, according to the taste of the dupe), are furnished by the broker. He insinuates softly that it is a good idea to invite them to a breakfast at his house, for at table they can converse freely, and after you will be invited to visit them. For this breakfast of four persons he asks sixty francs, which is nothing, as he has the wines of which he makes no account with friends—570 francs. At breakfast the table is supplied with large joints of cold meats and a splendid turkey, of which the ladies refuse to partake when they are offered the slightest morsel, and for two reasons—first, that a wife who eats little is an advantage; and secondly, that this same repast will serve for other victims. Upon some pretext the ladies leave the table, as they recollect an engagement at their banker's, etc. The broker softly informs him that he must send to his native place to make inquiries about him, and requests him to call the next day and arrange this matter, which he accordingly does, and there meets accidentally the lady and her aunt.

A clerk is called who is to make the necessary inquiries. The applicant must pay the expenses of the journey, which will amount to one hundred and forty francs. He hesitates. The aunt very naturally declares that she will pay one-half, and to set the example draws out an elegant silk purse which she says is the work of her niece—he admires it—she offers it to him—he accepts, and as it is necessary to strike while the iron is hot, the clerk leaves immediately—710 francs. During the clerk's absence he visits the agency, but does not meet the ladies. The broker reminds him of the gift of the purse, and wishing to make a return, he gives a brilliant of two hundred and fifty francs—960 francs. The clerk (who has not left Paris) has been taken suddenly ill on his journey, which lasts four days, and costs eighty francs—1,040 francs. Finally the applicant becomes impatient, but the broker informs him, with an air of the deepest grief, that he must consider himself very fortunate—that his vigilance has saved him from the great misfortune which menaced him—that he has just learned that the father of the young girl is condemned to the galleys for life—that she is unworthy of him. He leaves, congratulating himself upon his escape. The trick is played, leaving room for another.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

THE PEACE JUBILEE.

The following interesting letter from a visitor to the Coliseum has been picked up. It explaines itself and needs no comment. We are sorry it was not received sooner.

BOSTON, June 15, 1869.

Dear Maria:—I take the first opportunity to give you a description of my visit to the grate Collisham on Saint James' Park, and an account of the wonderful things I saw. When I reached the city, crowds of people filled the streets and all were going the same way. I followed the crowd at once and after walking about a mile, I came to the greatest lot of pop corn saloons, pea-nut shops, and gingerbread shanties that you ever saw. Passing these, I came to the grate Collishion, as it is called; and I assure you it is 10 times bigger than I expected. Its dimensions are vast and its proportions large, as you may well imagine when I tell you that it covers an acre of ground more than Uncle Silases cranberry meader, and is 14 feet and seven inches higher than the flag-staff at the corners.

There was a large lot of women and men, most all of whom appeared to be engaged in getting into the mammouth show. Like the gold-paved city we read of, it has 12 gates. Into one of these I went, and was soon seated in section 16, slip 10.

It is not possible for me to describe the inside. The audience made me think of the other world, and when the singing commenced, I lost all interest in this earth. Well while I was gazing about me, a man mounted the rostrum, and said a very beautiful prayer, which I could not hear. Then the mayor of the city, Mr. Shirtless, welcomed the audience to the hub of the univers, and the orator of the day said a few words, which I also did not understand. At last the orator finished his speech, and we were all so glad that he had got through, that we stamped and clapped and hollered as loud as we could. Mr. Gilmore, the projector of this grate concert, came out with a yard stick about five feet long in his hand, and mounted the stand. They cheered him as he passed up the ile of the Coliseum. He majestically waived the yard stick. As he did so, more than ninety fiddles commenced playing; then as he went on with his gestures, bands of music, a big drum and a large hand organ, joined in the chorus, creating a very fine effect. Again Patric S. waved the yard-stick, and 10,000 singers rose to their feet and commenced singing. Such a sight and sound, I never want to forget. It filled my sole with raptures, and raised me above all subluminary mortals.

How can I describe the scene that followed; I can not do much more than extract from the programme. Old Bull played an oratorio on a small fiddle. He is a splendid fiddler. Madame Pearipper, a large, square built, English Italian lady, shaped some like the ship in which the Knickerbockers discovered Manhattan, next mounted the rostrum. She sung a beautiful quartette, all alone and filled the air with mellowdy. Mrs. Pearipper has a beautiful voice, and gave her services for the moderate sum of $6,000. The big drum also joined in the chorus. There was more than a thousand instruments in attendance, besides an orchestra of 10,000 voices. One man played on the cannon, and another rung 35 bells by telegraph. 100 firemen played on 100 anvils, keeping good time, and producing a fine effect. The firemen were dressed in red shirts with brown paper caps. The proceeds of this day's performance amount to a bushell and a half of greenbacks, which after deviding six peeks among the managers, will all be given to the poor.

Yours ever, JACOB JUDKINS.

SYMPTONS OF OLD MAIDISHNESS.

A Scotch paper thus details them:

When a woman begins to drink her tea without sugar—that's a symptom.

When a woman gives a sigh on hearing of a wedding—that's a sympton.

When a woman begins to say that she's refused many an offer—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to say what a dreadful set of creatures men are, and that she wouldn't be bothered with one for all the world—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to have a little dog trotting after her—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to have a cat at her elbow at meal times, and gives it sweetened milk—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to be ashamed to take off her bonnet in a gentleman's company because she has no cap on—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to change her shoes every time she comes into the house after a walk—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to say that a servant lass has no business to have a sweetheart—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to rub her fingers over the chairs and table to see if they are dusty—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to go to bed with her stockings and a flannel night-cap on—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to put her fingers before her mouth when talking to any one for fear that they should see that she's losing her teeth—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to talk about rheumatism in her knees and elbows—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins to find fault with her looking glass, and says it does not show the features right—that's a symptom.

When a woman begins talking about cold drafts, and stops up all the crevices in the doors and windows—that's a symptom.

THE OCEAN BANK of New York, on the corner of Fulton and Geeenwich streets, was robbed by burglars on Sunday night of from $300,000 to $1,000,000 in convertible securities and currency. The burglary was effected in a most scientific manner, and the tools, which were left behind, were of the finest make. Only a very slight clue is given as to who the robbers were. It seems they rented a room underneath the vault, and may have been for some weeks perfecting their arrangements, but it is suspected that they were assisted by some one inside the bank.

PLEASURE TRAVEL,

In the direction of northern routes has rapidly increased within the past week, especially over the Rutland line to Montreal and Saratoga, which from its close connections with other lines radiating to the several points of compass, is deservedly popular with the travelling public. We speak with confidence in commending this route, as personal experience in a trip over the line last week, through the courtesy of Messrs. Field and Faxon, General Agents of the two principal routes, proved to us that no more pleasurable tour can be found than amid the magnificent scenery and delightful air, of the Green Mountains and the Adirondacks. From Boston the traveller can journey through Vermont to the various points of interest around Lake Champlain and thence by rail to Montreal, or to Niagara down the St. Lawrence and Lake by steamer, or stopping at Rutland can take the cars of the Rensellaer & Saratoga Railroad to the famous headquarters of fashion in the summer season, and continue his tour to Albany, where the magnificent steamers of the People's Line will convey him down the Hudson to New York, taking the boats of the Fall River and Newport lines for the East. All this can be accomplished in a week's time, or less if necessary, and the great variety of beautiful and ever changing scenery will well repay a tourist for time and money expended. Excursion tickets, good till November, can be obtained at the office, No. 82 Washington street, Boston, where particulars of routes will be cheerfully furnished.

Murray's "Adventures in the Adirondacks," a charming story of life in the wilderness, published by Fields, Osgood & Co., Boston, says of the Rutland route—"The tourist, pleasure-seeker, traveller or invalid, who would ride through a most romantic section of country, cannot do better than take a seat in one of the luxurious cars of this line, at the depot of the Fitchburg Railroad, Causeway street, Boston. Tourists say there is no more diversified and pleasing scenery east of the Missouri river than along this line, and it is attracting more and more attention every year. This is the most direct and quickest route from Boston to the Adirondacks. There are other delightful routes, and to the pleasure seeking traveller, who has leisure, we would suggest going to Saratoga via Rutland, thence to Glen's Falls, and through the romantic waters of Lake George, or from Saratoga to Whitehall, connecting with the Champlain steamers, thus traversing the lake from its southern to its northern extremity. Nothing can be more delightfully tranquilizing than a moonlight sail across the lake."

We would commend the work from which we have taken the above, to travellers and others as an intensely interesting book—just what is wanted by all who are in quest of information concerning the routes and scenery of the mountain region of Vermont and New York. We shall take the liberty of making a few extracts from its pages next week.

A NATIONAL CHORUS.—The unparalleled success of the Peace Jubilee in Boston has stirred up the friends of music to an endeavor to form a grand national organization, whereby the latent musical sentiment of the country will be stimulated into energetic action, and developing a musical taste in the hearts of the masses. A circular has already been issued by the Director of the Conservatory of Music, and forwarded to all parts of the country, requesting musical societies to send delegates to a convention at the Music Hall in September next, for the purpose of effecting a national organization. The project has the approval of the friends of music in all parts of the land.

It is not to be expected that the mass of the people will appreciate the higher order of music, for which those who relish the profoundest musical conceptions are earnest in their demands. The latter are mainly those who are absorbed in the study of recondite creations, and become so highly attuned to their beauties as to despise simpler and less profound creations. The "Star Spangled Banner" and "The Anvil Chorus" in the Peace Jubilee were received with enthusiastic applause by the multitude, but to a highly trained musical taste these simpler forms of melody would be in a measure expressionless; their refined taste would require a more classical entertainment, and should this desire be a controlling influence in the formation of a national organization, doubts may be expressed of its early success. It would, however, effect its chief object of bringing the people to a higher standard of taste and cultivation in the art, and in this way would be a gratifying success. We shall await its farther developments with interest.

COMPLIMENTARY CONCERT.—Our readers will observe the programme of the concert to be given at Weymouth Town Hall next Tuesday evening, which presents features of unusual interest, in its presentation of solos, etc., by the best solo talent in Boston, embracing among others Messrs. Barnabee and Whitney, who are unrivalled in their profession.

Such an entertainment as this is a rarity outside of cities, and as, in addition, the concert is in testimony to Mr. Webb's efficient services as leader of the Weymouth Choral Society, there should be a perfect jam on Tuesday night. The famous Anvil Chorus will be given with accompaniment of ten anvils.

MUSTER.—Official orders have been issued by Adjutant General Cunningham for the annual muster of the state military, which will be this year by brigades. The first brigade will go into camp on the 10th of August, probably at Strawberry Hill in Hull, although this location has not been fully decided upon.

Chelsea is now agitated by reported ghostly demonstrations on the marshes. Every night, between midnight and four o'clock A. M., it is reported that a noise is heard from the marshes like a very loud screech, and there are residents of the vicinity who declare that they have seen a very large figure, which appeared to them very ghostly, moving along over the marshes.

The running of a Sunday line of steamers being obnoxious to the good people of Fall River, it will be discontinued by the Narragansett Steamship Company, and the Sunday boats henceforth run from Newport.

"Barrett's" Reliable Hair Restorative.

THE ANNIVERSARY

Of American Independence was celebrated by neighboring towns in various ways. Hingham dedicated the new public library, with an oration by Hon. Thos. Russell. Abington held the annual temperance picnic at Island Grove, with addresses by Rev. Mrs. Hanaford, Dr. Lees, Wm. L. Garrison, and others. At South Weymouth the Park was the scene of an exciting horse trot, which attracted a crowd of spectators.

The Managers gave three purses, to be trotted for. The first race was for a purse of $100, which closed with the following:—G. B. Blanchard's b. m. "Kitty Blanchard," Harrison Rogers' blk. g. "Darkness," and Alden Nash's s. g. "Weymouth Boy." Darkness did not put in an appearance, and the race between Kitty and the Boy was warmly contested, the former winning in three straight heats. Time, 5.21, 2.42, 2.47 1-2.

Quincy had a grand celebration on Monday. Noisy demonstration in the morning; procession at 7 o'clock, of schools, trades, antiques and horribles; services in church at 10 1-2, where an oration was delivered by Charles Francis Adams, Jr.; open air concert at sunset; the whole concluded with a grand display of fireworks in the evening.

In the yacht races in Boston harbor, the Secret, owned by Joshua Binney, of Weymouth, took the first prize in her class—a silver pitcher valued at $50, and the yacht owned by Mr. Denton, of East Braintree, took the second prize in her class. Mr. Charles Bicknell, of Weymouth, won one of the prizes in the velocipede race in the morning.

TRANSFORMATION.—The old cars Nos. 6 and 7, of the South Shore Railroad, have been rebuilt under the direction of Mr. John Lincoln, master of the repair shop at Cohasset, and their elegant appearance has elicited much praise from the patrons of the road, the decoration, by Mr. Webster Pratt, being of the highest style of the art. The cost of reconstruction of each car was about $2500. The South Shore, under the efficient management of Superintendent Beal, is in an unusually prosperous condition, and his efforts to promote the comfort of passengers and furnish every needed accommodation, are appreciated by the travelling public.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Company, held at the Old Colony Station Tuesday, the following named gentlemen were unanimously chosen directors for the ensuing year: Onslow Stearns, Oliver Ames, Uriel Crocker, F. B. Hayes, John H. Loud.

WEYMOUTH.

THE FIRE ENGINE FESTIVAL last Saturday afforded our citizens a day of unusual enjoyment, and the occasion brought in a large number of people from abroad. The firemen assembled early in the morning, the Amazon company wearing their new and tasty uniform of blue blouse and white cap, contrasting finely with the red shirts of the Union company. The Amazons escorted the Unions from the Square to the junction of the turnpikes, where they received the King Phillip Co. of East Abington, who had brought their new engine with them. The procession of the three companies, with their tubs, made a fine show as they passed down Washington street to the Square, and through East Braintree, where they countermarched and then returned to the Square, and partook of a collation in Lincoln Hall. In the afternoon the companies again paraded, passing up Front st. to the manufactory of Messrs. Nash, and returning to Lincoln Square, where the powers of the three engines were tested. In the perpendicular trials, the streams were of no perceptible difference of height, but in the horizontal playing the King Phillips took the lead, squirting 145 feet, the Union playing 130 feet, and the Amazon 125 feet. The fair triumph of the Abington company was received with cheers, and the machines were then housed, while the firemen, with their invited guests, returned to Lincoln Hall, where an excellent supper had been prepared. The company was called to order by Dr. Warren, who presided on the occasion, and after the clatter of knives and forks had ceased, the speakers were introduced, among them Dr. Underwood, foreman of the King Phillip, who made a statement of the efforts put forth in his community to provide means of protection against fire, in which much opposition had been encountered, and it was only through private enterprise that they had obtained the engine. Votes of thanks to the ladies, and committee who had aided in the festival, and also to the Band, who had furnished a more than ordinary quantity of excellent music, were adopted. The company then broke up, with the expression on the part of the foreman of the King Phillip to reciprocate the hospitalities extended to them, at an early day. A poem, which was sung by the audience will be found on the last page.

MASONIC.—Delta Lodge was dedicated in due form last Friday evening, by the officers of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. The ceremony, which was impressive and interesting, attracted a number of brethren from other Lodges, and the occasion was one of much enjoyment. At the close of the ceremonies a collation was provided by the Lodge. Delta Lodge enters upon its work under favorable auspices, and bids fair to be one of the foremost in this ancient order.

APPOINTMENT.—Mr. Christopher T. Bailey, of Weymouth, has received the appointment of Deputy State Constable, from Major Jones, and has entered upon his duties. Last week some of the venders of beer and cider were notified by him to cease their sales, in accordance with the law.

ACCIDENT.—Mrs. Aldrich, matron of the poorhouse, unharnessed the horse Tuesday, and in riding to the barn she was thrown from the back of the animal, receiving a kick which severely injured her knee.

THE ladies of the Trinity Parish announce a fair at Lincoln Hall next Thursday, which we doubt not will be a very enjoyable occasion.

PERSEVERING.—A debt of some $1,500, which has been for some time hanging over the Baptist society of Weymouth, has been extinguished through the persevering efforts of Mrs W. P. Sanborn, one of the members. An offer was made by M. C. Dizer, to contribute one-half the amount needed, if the society raise the other half, in addition to which he afterward agreed to give $100 for every hundred which would be collected on the other half. Mrs Sanborn went to work, and by personal visitation succeeded in raising the remainder, a large portion of it being small contributions.

WEYMOUTH TOWN MEETING.—At the meeting held June 28, the following business was transacted. The meeting was called to order by the clerk, and Elias Richards was chosen Moderator.

On the petition of E. S Beals and six others in relation to widening and straightening North street, Voted, That the three first members of the Board of Selectmen be a Committee to represent the interests of the town at the meeting of the Commissioners on said petition. Elisha Pratt declined serving; John Blanchard was chosen to fill the vacancy.

The Committee appointed at the annual meeting to prepare By Laws in relation to truant children reported as follows:—

REPORT.

The School Committee, to whom was committed the subject of preparing By Laws in regard to truant children, present the following report:

In order to secure the regular attendance in our Public Schools of all those children who are not instructed in private schools, the Committee recommend the passage of the following By-Laws:

Section 1. Every person having under his control a child between the ages of eight and fourteen years, residing in the town of Weymouth, shall annually during the continuance of his control send such child to some public school in said town, at least twelve weeks, six weeks of which shall be consecutive; and for every neglect of such duty the party offending shall forfeit to the use of the town a sum not exceeding twenty dollars; but if it appears upon the inquiry of the truant officers or school committee of the town, or upon the trial of any prosecution, that the party so neglecting was not able, by reason of poverty, to send such child to school, or that such child has been otherwise furnished with the means of education for a like period of time, or has already acquired the branches of learning taught in such schools, or that his bodily or mental condition has been such as to prevent his attendance at school or application to study for the period required, the penalty before mentioned shall not be incurred.

Section II. Teachers having charge of pupils who are habitually truant, shall report in writing, their names, the number of times absent with the dates for the same and the names of their parents or guardians to the committee or superintendent of the town, and it shall be the duty of either the committee or superintendent to investigate cases so reported, and if in their judgement it shall be deemed necessary they shall report the same to the truant officers, who shall prosecute such offenders. The party convicted of truancy under this section, shall forfeit to the use of the town a sum not exceeding five dollars for the first, and a sum not less than five or more than ten dollars for each subsequent offence.

Section III. Any minor convicted under either of the preceding sections, may, at the discretion of the justice having jurisdiction of the case, instead of the fines mentioned in said sections, be committed to any such institution of instruction, house of reformation, almshouse, or other suitable situation provided for the purpose, for such time, not exceeding two years, as such justice shall determine.

Section IV. A minor convicted of either of the offenses mentioned in these By-Laws, and sentenced to pay a fine, may, in default of payment, be committed to such institution of instruction, house of reformation, almshouse, or other suitable situation provided as aforesaid.

Section V. Any trial justice shall have jurisdiction of complaints made under the preceding sections. All warrants issued upon such complaints shall be made returnable before said justice at the place named in the warrant.

Section VI. The town shall appoint at the annual meeting, four of the constables of the town as truant officers, who alone shall be authorized, in case of violation of the preceding By-Laws, to make the complaint and carry into execution the judgement thereon.

At a meeting held June 28th by the legal voters of the town of Weymouth, the above "By-Laws" were accepted and adopted.

Attest,

DARIUS SMITH, JR.,
Town Clerk of Weymouth.

The report was accepted and adopted.

Voted, That the By-Laws be submitted to the Superior Court.

Voted, That the article in relation to the act of the Legislature concerning altering, widening and improveing streets and ways in cities and towns, be laid upon the table.

The report of the Selectmen on the widening and alterations in Louds Lane; laying out a town way in South Weymouth, near the house of Ephraim Bradford; the alteration of the termination of the town way near the Phosphate Works of Mr. Bradley; alteration of the corner at the junction of Church with Commercial street, and laying out the road on Mount Pleasant, were all accepted and adopted.

Voted, To instruct the Selectmen to work the Mount Pleasant road this season.

BRAINTREE.

UNION SABBATH SCHOOL.—We are happy to note the continued prosperity of this praiseworthy institution, which deserves the moral support of the community. It has an excellent staff of intelligent and enthusiastic teachers, and merits the attention of parents and others who are interested in the proper training of the young. If there ever was a time more than another, in the history of our country, requiring a strong and manly avowal of christianity, it is the present, above all others. The evidences necessitating such an avowal are lying all around us. At the Annual meeting of the New Hampshire Bible Society among other incidents mentioned in the Secretary's report, is one which states that "The only instance where persons refused to allow the Bible in their houses was at Concord, where seventeen American families spurned the Bible from their houses." In reading such a statement as this, with a full knowledge of the ancestral record of these seventeen families, we lose faith even in possibilities. E.

Miss Julia Carpenter, the snaketamer, pitched her tent in Mr. Wales' yard, last week, and exhibited her slimy looking pets. She had a small boa constrictor, weighing about thirty-five pounds, who wound himself affectionately about her shoulders, and hissed at the spectators.

A TINY AFFAIR.—A pair of humming-birds have raised an interesting family of fledglings in the orchard of Mr. Levi Loud, Weymouth Landing, this season. The eggs were about the size of small beans, and the nest is not more than four inches in circumference.

"Barrett's" produces natural change.

BRAINTREE, June 30th, 1869.

Mr. Geo. T. Faulkner tenders his sincere and grateful acknowledgments, to those friends whose substantial sympathy afforded such timely relief from the effects of his recent misfortune His little ones are again thriving or what may be truly called the genuine "milk of human kindness."

The fifth, at Braintree, passed off very quietly. Some of the citizens went to Boston, Quincy and Abington, there being no celebration at home, and but little enthusiasm.

The estate of Col. H. D. Blake at North Braintree, was sold at auction last week, to a Mr. Thompson, of Boston, for $5,500.

Our thanks are due Hon. F. A. Hobart, of South Braintree, for valuable State documents.

Capt. C. C. Bumpus, of Braintree, inspector of customs, was seriously injured in the right arm last week, by a fall when leaving a vessel.

NORTH WEYMOUTH.

A CHALLENGE.—In these days of challenges by base ball clubs, of rowing and sailing matches, of walking against time, of velocipede and horse races, &c &c., it might interest some of the veteran readers of the Gazette, in some of the families whose ages have been recorded of late as remarkable for their longevity, to state a fact connected with a veteran soldier of the war of 1812, a gentleman farmer of North Weymouth, of four-score years. Yesterday morning he arose at the usual time, and went to his field, put in his scythe, and at 6 o'clock A. M., before he had eaten his breakfast, he had mowed half an acre of stout grass, which he says will make more than a ton of the best hay. This beats all the races that have been recorded, and any person, old or young, that wishes to put in his scythe with Mr. David Blanchard, of this place, can do so on a challenge from him that this can't be beat. Mr. Blanchard is hale, hearty and vigorous, enjoying as good health as ever in his life, and bids fair to remain with us a score of years longer. W. W.

SUNSTRUCK.—Henry Newton, Esq., of North Weymouth, while haying at Cohasset last Saturday, received a sunstroke, but is now recovering.

OBSERVE.—A good deal of truth is embodied in the note of a friend to the newspaper, who has reaped a rich harvest from liberal advertising, and who says:—

A man cannot do business without advertising, and the only question should be the best way to advertise. If you have a lot of personal property to sell, which is best; to write out a few notices that not one in fifty will stop to read, or go to the printer and have a lot of well displayed posters? If you are in business of any kind, is it not better to keep a regular standing advertisement in your home paper, that will stare your friends and customers in the face every week, rather than trust to the old fogy idea of —"Oh, they all know me?"

But, says one, advertising costs money. Very true, and so does everything else; and it is a good thing for you that advertising does cost something. If it did not, every little worthless concern would stand as good a chance for being known as the very best and most useful. If you want the people to know that you have anything to sell, advertise it in your home paper first, then in your neighboring papers. The man who has a reputable business, and spends the most in a liberal system of advertising, is the one who makes the most money. This is a truth well verified by the experience of those who have tried it. A wagon may be made to run without greasing, but its hard work; so a man may manage to scratch along without advertising, but he will be very apt to see his advertising neighbor going ahead of him at a 2,40 gait.

The French Atlantic cable will probably be landed at Duxbury next week. The laying of the cable by the Great Eastern has thus far been successful. A smaller steamer will take it from the Provinces to the Bay.

A North Bridgewater correspondent of the Randolph Register says "The Crispins who number some 800, having opened a co-operative store, are creating quite a little dust among grocerymen; flour has tumbled some dollars per bbl. and other goods are cheaper in proportion. Judging by the piles of goods that go up and down Green St., they are doing heavy business.

The streets of Randolph are to be lighted with 32 lamps, and the committee are authorised to extend them where subscriptions will cover expense.

The wife of Charles Crane, residing in the South part of Quincy, cut her throat with a razor last week. She made a fearful wound, but it being below the jugular vein, did not prove fatal, and she is likely to recover. She had been out of health for some time, which affected her mind, and she was taken to the Worcester hospital.

"Sealed proposals" were advertised in this sheet some little time since, for the building of a barn on the County estate, by the Commissioners, and the contract was awarded to Messrs. Burt & Co., of Mattapan, Dorchester, who have been heretofore, extensive and successful builders. With a large gang of workmen the building nears completion, and with its fair proportions, cupola, and slate roof, although a barn, bids fair to be ornamental to that section of the village. We learn that the contract for work was for between $4000 and $5000. Mr. John Kiernan did the stone work. The house formerly occupying the site of this barn, was purchased by Edmund Thomas, Esq. who removed to Highland street, where with alterations and additions, it looks "as good as new"—if not better.

No. 30 of "HEARTH AND HOME" will be a specially fine one, both in the variety and excellence of its matter and the beauty and value of its illustrations. It will contain the begining of the very interesting story, "The Romance of a Rich Young Girl," which was everywhere popular. "The Romance of a Rich Young Girl" will be found to possess all these qualities in an equally marked degree. The illustrations were designed and engraved expressly in Paris by eminent artists.

The Boston and Hingham Steamboat Co. have engaged a dredger, which is at work digging away an annoying corner on the edge of the channel, which at low water has hitherto proved an obstruction. This will prove a great improvement.

No poisonous drugs in "Barrett's."

Apply "Barrett's" and look young. "Barrett's" improves the appearance.

The all-gone feeling which people sometimes speak of is caused by want of proper action of the liver and heart. These may be assisted, and the bowels regulated, by Parsons' Purgative Pills in small doses.

Corn and Flour are staple articles; but not more so than Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, where known. It is good for children or adults, for any internal soreness of the chest or bowels, and the best Pain Killer prepared, under whatever name.

Attention is called to the advertisement of the Commonwealth Life Insurance Co. Agents who make arrangements with this Company, will find they represent a sound and live institution.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup.

Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills will cure Consumption, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, if taken according to directions. They are all three to be taken at the same time. They cleanse the stomach, relax the liver and put it to work; then the appetite becomes good; the food digests and makes good blood; the patient begins to grow in flesh; the diseased matter ripens in the lungs, and the patient outgrows the disease and gets well. This is the only way to cure consumption.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary Consumption. The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs, nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, and the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To do this, the Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver, so that the Pulmonic Syrup and the food will make good blood.

Schenck's Mandrake Pills act upon the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the ducts of the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved; the stools will show what the Pills can do; nothing has ever been invented except calomel (a deadly poison which is very dangerous to use unless with great care,) that will unlock the gall bladder and start the secretions of the liver like Schenck's Mandrake Pills.

Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative, and the alkali in the Seaweed, which this preparation is made of, assists the stomach to throw out the gastric juice to dissolve the food with the Pulmonic Syrup, and it is made into good blood without fermentation or souring in the stomach.

The great reason why physicians do not cure Consumption is, they try to do too much; they give medicines to stop the cough, to stop chills, to stop night sweats, hectic fever, and by so doing they derange the whole digestive powers, locking up the secretions, and eventually the patient sinks and dies.

Dr. Schenck, in his treatment, does not try to stop a cough, night sweats, chills or fever. Remove the cause, and they will all stop of their own accord. No one can be cured of Consumption, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Canker, Ulcerated Throat, unless the liver and stomach are made healthy.

When there is no lung disease and only Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are sufficient, without the Pulmonic Syrup. Take the Mandrake Pills freely in all billious complaints, as they are perfectly harmless.

If a person has consumption, of course the lungs in some way are diseased, either tubercles, abscesses, bronchial irritation, pleura adhesion, or the lungs are a mass of inflammation and fast decaying. In such cases what must be done? It is not only the lungs that are wasting, but it is the whole body. The stomach and liver have lost their power to make blood out of food. Now the only chance is to take Dr. Schenck's three medicines, which will bring up a tone to the stomach, the patient will begin to want food, it will digest easily and make good blood; then the patient begins to gain in flesh, and as soon as the body begins to grow, the lungs commence to heal up, and the patient gets fleshy and well. This is the only way to cure Consumption.

Dr. Schenck, who has enjoyed uninterrupted health for many years past, and now weighs 225 pounds, was wasted away to a mere skeleton in the very last stage of Pulmonary Consumption, his physicians having pronouncing his case hopeless and abandoned him to his fate. He was cured by the aforesaid medicines, and since his recovery many thousands similarly afflicted have used Dr. Schenck's preparations with the same remarkable success. Full directions accompany each, making it not absolutely necessary to personally see Dr. Schenck, unless patients wish their lungs examined, and for this purpose he is professionally at his Principal Office, Philadelphia, every Saturday, where all letters for advice must be addressed. He is also professionally at No. 32 Bond Street, New York, every other Tuesday, and at No. 35 Hanover Street, Boston, every other Wednesday. He gives advice free, but for a thorough examination with his Respirometer the price is $5. Office hours at each city from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Price of the Pulmonic Syrup and Seaweed Tonic each $1.50 per bottle, or $7.50 a half dozen. Mandrake Pills 25 cents a box. G. C. GOODWIN & CO., 38 Hanover St., Boston, Wholesale agents. For sale by all druggists.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Ulcerous affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

The following Remedies are all old and well established and thousands have been benefited by their use. They are for sale by druggists generally.

The Peruvian Syrup,

a protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, supplies the blood with its Life Element, IRON, giving strength, vigor, and new life to the whole system. For Dyspepsia, Debility, Female Weaknesses, etc., it is a specific. A 32 page Pamphlet, containing a valuable treatise on "Iron as a Medicine," with certificates and recommendations, &c., will be sent free.

J. P. DINSMORE, Proprietor.
No. 36 Dey St., New York.

Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry has been used for nearly half a century for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, and every affection of the Throat, Lungs and Chest. It cures a Cough by loosening and cleansing the lungs and allaying irritation, thus removing the cause instead of drying up the Cough and leaving the cause behind.

SETH W. FOWLE & SON, Proprietors,
No. 18 Tremont Street, Boston.

Dr. H. Anders' Iodine Water.

A pure solution of Iodine dissolved in water without a solvent, containing 1 1-4 grains of Iodine to each fluid ounce of water. Iodine is admitted by all medical men to be the best known remedy for SCROFULA, ULCERS, CANCERS, SYPHILIS, SALT RHEUM, &c., and thousands can testify to the wonderful virtues of this preparation in such cases. Circulars free.

J. P. DINSMORE, Proprietor,
No. 36 Dey Street, New York.

Grace's Celebrated Salve

works like magic on OLD SORES, BURNS, SCALDS, CUTS, WOUNDS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, CHAPPED HANDS, CHILBLAINS, &c., &c. It is prompt in acting, soothing the pain, takes out soreness, and reduces the most angry looking swellings and inflammations; thus affording relief and a complete cure.

Only 25 cents a box; sent by mail for 35 cts.
SETH W. FOWLE & SON, Proprietors,
No. 18 Tremont Street, Boston.

The Mathusek Piano

F. Mathusic, of New York, has invented and patented an improvement in the scale and sounding board of the Piano, by which is obtained about one-third more power, with a tone remarkably clear, pure and brilliant.

The Piano is also much less liable to get out of tune.

Will be on exhibition and for sale at 323 Washington Street, Agent wanted. Circulars free. Address, Agency of Mathusek Piano Fortes.

MRS. BELCHER'S CURE FOR FEMALE WEAKNESS.

This remedy, made from an Indian receipt, is entirely vegetable, and cures without Supporters. Circulars or further information sent on receipt of stamp, by addressing the manufacturer, Mrs. Linus Belcher, Randolph, Mass. Wholesale Agents, Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, Mass; Demas Barnes & Co., 21 Park Row, N. Y. For sale by druggists everywhere.

UNION PIANO MAKERS
CELEBRATED GRAND AND SQUARE FIRST PREMIUM

PIANO-FORTES.

THE UNITED PIANO MAKERS' STOCK COMPANY is composed exclusively of superier workmen, who have held prominent positions in some of the best Piano Forte Establishments in this country and Europe.

They challenge the most thorough scrutiny, and are willing to subject their instruments to any test or comparison with those of any other manufacture, as to touch, sweetness and depths of tone, durability, gracefulness of proportion, beauty of finish, &c. FR ZUCHTMANN,

A Large Business

The firm of J. W. RAND & Co., who occupy the new granite building directly opposite the Court House, Boston, are probably the largest dealers in their line of business in the New England States. Their spacious and elegant store, one of the finest in the city, is arranged in three departments, comprising the business of Hats, Caps, Furs,—Trunks, Valises, Bags,—Gentlemen's Furnishing Goods. In is found the Gentlemen's Dress Hat in all styles The young man's nobby Felt or Straw Hat, and the neat and tasty Hat or Cap for youth's wear, also Panama and Straw Hats of every shape.

DEPARTMENT B

comprises the largest assortment of Trunks, Travelling and Shopping Bags in the State, including the Sole Leather, Saratoga, Patent Excelsior, and Bureau Trunk, also Gents' Railroad and Ladies Shopping Bags of many kinds.

DEPARTMENT C

is especially arranged for the business of Gentlemen's Furnishing goods, Shirts, Hosiery, Gloves, Ties, Under Garments, &c. Their "Balance Yoke Shirt," (the patterns of which are secured by letters patent,) is claimed with justice as the best fitting shirt in the country.

This establishment is one of the most popular places of resort in Boston, and its great success is the result of business tact, gentlemanly clerks and low prices. 6-9

FOUTZ'S

CELEBRATED

HORSE AND CATTLE POWDERS.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly revivigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE, AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk, and cream twenty per cent, and make the butter firm and sweet.

In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a piper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

DODD'S

NERVINE

NEW LONDON, CONN., April 26, 1869.

REMEMBERED FRIEND—I thought it well to wait another week before writing, to see if I continued to improve, as I have been doing for some time, under the treatment of the new medicine, and I am happy to tell you that I am getting better—even faster than when you were here. I commenced the use of DODD'S NERVINE without anybody advising me to it. When I began with it I could only walk from my bed to the chair. My trouble has been extreme pain in the head, and has lasted over three years. All the medicine I have taken heretofore taken has failed to give any relief. I am now able to go up and down stairs, and daily improving. I consider the NERVINE the best medicine I ever found, and shall continue its use, for I am confident of entire recovery. I have taken only three bottles, and would not be without it on any account.

Very truly, MRS. I. S. NUTE. 7-10

A LETTER

From Dr. Connacher
To Dr. Wolcott.
Dear Sir: A Man
Called on me last night
To visit a sick woman,
Who was not expected
To live till morning
Several physicians
Had attended her,
And yesterday the Priest
Visited her for the last time.
She had been confined
Five weeks before my visit.
I found the room
Where she lay crowded
With Men and Women
Watching for her to die.
She was so low
She could not speak
Only in Whispers,
And very weak.

She had severe inflammation of the Bowels. I applied PAIN PAINT freely, and in less than fifteen minutes every particle of Pain was gone. Another TRIUMPH for your PAIN PAINT. Her flesh was nearly raw from repeated applications of Mustard Plasters. They purchased a $5 bottle of PAIN PAINT and she is doing well, and out of Danger. I had just got home, and nearly asleep, when another persons came after me wanting relief for his Wife, who had toothache. She was cured instantly by applying PAIN PAINT freely to the outside of her face. Last Monday night a gentleman who keeps a Livery Stable here called on me to visit his Wife, who has been suffering for a long time with Liver Complaint, Cough, and a host of troubles, the result of Catarrh. Every Physician in this town has practiced on her, but always left her worse. The Bottles that had contained the Drugs she had swallowed would fill a large Dry Goods Box. In her case I used both PAIN PAINT and ANNIHILATOR; in a few minutes she was entirely relieved of all pain, and could talk in longer breaths than she had done in many months. She bought a pint of PAIN PAINT and a pint of the ANNIHILATOR, and is recovering her health rapidly. I could send you a ton red cases where I have used your Remedies for Pain, Sickness, and Diseases, which had baffled all the skill of Medical Practioners, that have fully recovered by your simple and harmless Remedies, by my recommendations, and for whom I have prescribed.

A Baptist Clergyman here in Hyde Park is an enthusiastic admirer of PAIN PAINT, and wants to get one of your Charts to hang up in his library. He thinks PAIN PAINT is the greatest thing ever known. I shall go to Pittston in a few days and will write you more particulars. A sworn affidavit, handed to me by a gentleman residing in Wilkesbarre, Penn., to whom I applied PAIN PAINT with astonishing success.

DR. J. CONNACHER.

SCRANTON, PA., May 12th, 1869.

On Friday, April 30, I was suddenly taken with rheumatism in my back, so that I was unable to leave my bed. On Monday, May 3, Dr. Connacher was sent for; with great pain and difficulty, I turned over in bed to have him Paint my back. In less than three minutes I arose and dressed myself and went down stairs. I felt no more pain and but little soreness; I walked all around the public square and to the Bristol House in less than twenty minutes from the first application of Pain Paint. I am now free from all pain, and can be seen any day at the fruit and confectionery store on Main Street, near the public square. Wilkesbarre, Penn., May 5, 1869.

SAMUEL BUZINE.

Sworn and subscribed before me the 5th of May, 1869.

E. B. HARVY, Justice of the Peace, Wilkesbarre, Penn.

Dr. R. L WOLCOTT, of 181 Chatham Square, N. Y., has more patients than any Hospital in the world. He discards all dosing, and removes pain, free of cost, at his office. His Pain Paint for Pain, and Annihilator, for Catarrh and Weak Nerves, is sold at all Drug Stores. He charges nothing for advice, and sends to any person his Remedies, free of express charges, on receipt of $5 at each order. Therefore none need be deceived by counterfeits. He uses only White Wrappers. 7-10

☞ PERRY DAVIS' Vegetable Pain Killer. We clip the following from the Providence General Advertiser. "At this season of the year, when cholera, cholera morbus, dysentery, and other kindred complaints are sure to prevail, every body should be liberally supplied with the Pain Killer. Persons leaving home, whether it be for a day's excursion or a trip to Europe, should be in a condition to place their hands on it at a moment's warning. Many diseases incident to the summer months which will prove fatal if not immediately checked, can be promptly cured by one or two doses of the Pain Killer. On more than one occasion have we been relieved of intense suffering by the timely use of the above named preparation." Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Medicine Dealers. 9-12

The Fireman.

TUNE—Auld Lang Syne.

Our heroes from their battle fields
Are with the laurel crown'd,
And those returned upon their shields,
Are mourn'd in holy ground;
And shall not we in honor name
The men who may aspire
To battle with destroying flame.—
The conquerors of fire?

The fireman's duty, all must know
Who have that duty tried,
Is to be ready for a foe
That lurks on every side:
To meet it when the 'larum calls,
Prepared by night or day,
In lowly cot or lofty halls,
Destructive fire to stay.

Should danger threaten, undismay'd
The fireman hurries on,—
The Foreman's voice will be obeyed,
Their duty will be done;
Then give to those the honor due,
Who bravely do and dare;
The fireman to his office true,
A conq'ror's wreath should wear.

Andy Johnson is in Washington and has uncorked the vials of his wrath in a talk, of which the following is a sample:

He says he knows Grant thoroughly, has studied him, and is satisfied that he is the greatest farce that was ever thrust upon a people; that the little fellow has nothing in him—not a single idea—no policy and no conception of the political situation: that he don't understand the philosophy of a single question and is completely lost in trying to understand his position; that he is mendacious, cunning and treacherous; that this little fellow Grant is a mere upstart and accident of the war; that he is a subject more for pity than contempt; that physically, mentally and morally he is a non-entity; that his soul could revolve a thousand years in a hazlenut shell without knocking against its walls; that he has no policy, no standard, no creed, no faith; that he receives presents and appoints the givers to his Cabinet; that such a man degrades the Presidential office; that his fittest place is that of assistant at a cross-roads horse race; that he is a liar and a coward (Heaven save the mark!) and that under his administration we are tending to despotism or anarchy, and to repudiation or a moneyed aristocracy of bondholders; and so on to the end of the chapter.

The attention of reflecting invalids is invited to the following observations. The questions are such as the sick would be likely to ask: the replies are simple facts clothed in language that everybody can understand.

WHY
is Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient adapted to the cure of Indigestion and its concomitants?

BECAUSE
It tones the membranes of the stomach and promotes the secretion of the gastric juice, the solvent which converts the food into a life-sustaining agent; and also because it relieves the bowels without weakening them, and moderately stimulates the bile-producing organ.

WHY
is it recommended for obstructions in the kidneys and other renal diseases, and for dropsy?

BECAUSE
it combines the properties of a mild diuretic sudorific with those of a local and general invigorant, and by promoting perspiration relieves the blood of a large amount of morbid matter which would otherwise vitiate the secretions.

WHY
is it prescribed for rheumatism, and claimed to be eminently beneficial in all the varieties of that disease?

BECAUSE
rheumatism is caused by the inflamatory action of acid in the blood upon the fibres, membranes and ligaments; and the salines of the Seltzer Aperient being absorbed into the veinous system tend to neutralize the vitiating principle.

WHY
is it given by the faculty in all disorders of a febrile character?

BECAUSE
it opens the pores, reduces the temperature of the body, calms the nerves, and acts as a moderate evacuant, and has a refreshing effect upon the whole system. Of all fever drinks it is the most cooling and delightful.

In this brief summary of the virtues of Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperent, nothing is set forth which is not justified by testimony of competent medical men. 9-12

PHOTOGRAPHS AND TINTYPES.

CARD PICTURES taken with all the late improvements. All kinds of Photographic Likenesses, from the smallest Tintypes to Life Size Portraits, executed in the best style.

Especial attention paid to copying From Old Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, &c. This branch of the business he makes a Specialty, and would call attention to the fact that he seldom fails to give Perfect Satisfaction, even in Copying from Old Pictures which have been injured by stains or otherwise, and spoiled in themselves.

Many having copies of deceased friends are unwilling to trust them in the hands of a Photographer to copy, for fear they may be lost or injured. The most extreme care will be used by him with such pictures while in his hands. He employs one of the best Artists in Boston, who finishes his pictures in India Ink or Colors equal to any city work, and at less prices.

A good variety of Frames on hand, Gilt, Rosewood, Black Walnut, Rustic, &c.

Please call and see for yourselves.

[From Murray's adventures in the Adirondacks.]

THE NORTH WOODS.

The Adirondack Wilderness, or the "North Woods," as it is sometimes called, lies between the Lakes George and Champlain on the east, and the river St. Lawrence on the north and west. It reaches northward as far as the Canada line, and southward to Booneville. Its area is about that of the State of Connecticut. The southern part is known as the Brown Tract Region, with which the whole wilderness by some is confused, but with no more accuracy than any one county might be said to comprise an entire State. Indeed, 'Brown's Tract' is the least interesting portion of the Adirondack region. It lacks the lofty mountain scenery, the intricate mesh-work of lakes, and the wild grandeur of the country to the north. It is the lowland district, comparatively tame and uninviting. Not until you reach the Racquette do you get a glimpse of the magnificent scenery which makes this wilderness to rival Switzerland. There, on the very ridge-board of the vast water-shed which slopes northward to the St. Lawrence, eastward to the Hudson, and southward to the Mohawk, you can enter upon a voyage the like of which, it is safe to say, the world does not anywhere else furnish. For hundreds of miles I have boated up and down that wilderness, going ashore only to 'carry' around a fall, or across some narrow ridge dividing the otherwise connected lakes. For weeks I have paddled my cedar shell in all directions, swinging northerly into the St. Regis chain, westward nearly to Potsdam, southerly to the Black River country, and from thence penetrated to that almost unvisited region, the 'South Branch, without seeing a face but my guide's, and the entire circuit, it must be remembered, was through a wilderness yet to echo to the lumberman's axe. It is estimated that a thousand lakes, many yet unvisited, lie embedded in this vast forest of pine and hemlock. From the summit of a mountain, two years ago, I counted, as seen by my naked eye, forty-four lakes gleaming amid the depths of the wilderness like gems of purest ray amid the folds of emerald-colored velvet. Last summer I met a gentleman on the Racquette who had just received a letter from a brother in Switzerland, an artist by profession, in which he said, that, having travelled over all Switzerland, and the Rhine and Rhone region, he had not met with scenery which, judged from a purely artistic point of view, combined so many beauties in connection with such grandeur as the lakes, mountains, and forest of the Adirondack region presented to the gazer's eye." And yet thousands are in Europe to-day as tourists who never gave a passing thought to this marvellous country lying as it were at their very doors.

In the ministry you find the very men who would be the most benefited by this trip. Whether they should go as sportsmen or tourists, or in both capacities, a visit to the North Woods could not fail of giving them precisely such a change as is most desirable, and needed by them. In the wilderness they would find that perfect relaxation which all jaded minds require. In its vast solitude is a total absence of sights and sounds and duties, which keep the clergyman's brain and heart strung up, the long year through, to an intense, unnatural, and often fatal tension. There, from a thousand sources of invigoration, flow into the exhausted mind and enfeebled body currents of strength and life. There sleep woos you as the shadows deepen along the lake, and retains you in its gentle embrace until frightened away by the guide's merry call to breakfast. You would be astonished to learn, if I felt disposed to tell you, how many consecutive hours a certain minister sleeps during the first week of his annual visit to the woods! Ah me, the nights I have passed in the woods! How they haunt me with their sweet, suggestive memories of silence and repose! How harshly the steel-shod hoofs smite against the flinty pavement beneath my window, and clash with rude interruptions upon my ear as I sit recalling the tranquil hours I have spent beneath the trees! What restful slumber was mine; and not less gently than the close of day itself did it fall upon me, as I stretched myself upon my bed of balsam-boughs, with Rover at my side, not twenty feet from the shore where the ripples were playing coyly with the sand, and lulled by the low monotone of the pines, whose branches were my only shelter from the dew which gathered like gems upon their spear-like stems, sank, as a falling star fades from sight, into forgetfulness. And then the waking! The air fresh with the aroma of the wilderness. The morning blowing its perfumed breezes into your face. The drip, drip of the odorous gum in the branches overhead, and the colors of russet, of orange, and of gold streaking the eastern sky. After three or four nights of such slumber, the sleeper realizes the force and beauty of the great poet's apostrophe to sleep. If every church would make up a purse, and pack its worn and weary pastor off to the North Woods for a four weeks' jaunt, in the hot months of July and August, it would do a very sensible as well as pleasant act.

I estimate the cost thus:—

Guide-hire, $2.50 per day; board for self and guide while in the woods, $2.00 each per week; miscellanies (here is where the ten-dollar greenbacks come in), $25.00.

If he feels disposed to take a companion, he can do so (many go in couples), and thereby divide the cost of guide-hire, making it only $1.25 per day. But I would not advise one to do this, especially if his expenses are paid. Fifty dollars will pay one's travelling expenses both ways, from Boston to the Lower Saranac Lake, where you can meet your guide. From New York the expense is about the same. It is safe to say that one hundred and twenty-five dollars will pay all the expenses of a trip of a month's duration in the wilderness. I know of no other excursion in which such a small sum of money will return such per cent. in health, pleasure, and profit.

I am often asked, especially by ladies, if it is not dangerous to take such a trip, and if wild animals do not abound in the wilderness; and I know that many are deterred from making the excursion because of their timidity. The only animals concerning which the most timid could be alarmed are the bear, wolf, and panther. The latter is a very ugly neighbor indeed, and the less you have to do with him the better. I am tolerably familiar with wood life, and the sights and sounds of such danger as one is liable to meet in the wilderness; and John and I have slept more than once, calmly enough, with our rifles inside our blankets, not knowing when we lay down what cry might awaken us; but I should not purposely put myself in the way of a panther, unless I could run my eye along the sights of my double rifle when the barrels were freshly charged. In speaking of the panther, I do not, of course, allude to the Canadian wild-cat, with which the ignorant often confound the panther, but to the puma itself, an animal which often measures twelve feet from tip to tip, and is the slyest, strongest, bloodiest ranger of the woods. Now, fortunately, the panther is almost wholly unknown in this region. A few still live among the loneliest defiles and darkest gorges of the Adirondack Mountains, but they never come down, unless in the depth of winter, to the shores of the lakes to the west, or the banks of the rivers. Many years have passed since one has been seen by any of the guides. The region traversed by parties is as free from them as the state of Massachusetts.

Black bears abound in some localities, but more timid harmless creatures do not exist, all the old stories to the contrary notwithstanding. In temper and action toward men they resemble very closely the woodchuck. Their first and only anxiety is to escape man's presence. If you penetrate far enough into the wilderness, you will occasionally, at night, hear them nosing around your camp, with hedgehogs and the like, but ever careful to keep out of your sight. A stick, piece of bark, or tin plate shied in the direction of the noise, will scatter them like cats. The same is true of wolves. They are only too anxious to keep out of your sight and hearing. Touch a match to an old stump, and in two hours there will not be a wolf within ten miles of you. I wish all to take the statement as in every sense true, when I declare that there is absolutely no danger, nor indeed the least approach to danger, in camping in the wilderness. Many and many a night has my wife, when John and I were off on a hunt, slept soundly and without a thought of danger, in the depths of the forest, fifty miles from even a hunter's cabin. It is true that her education in woodcraft is more extensive than that of most ladies, and, for presence of mind, quickness and skill with the rifle, many so-called "crack shots" might well take lessons of her; but were this not true, I regard a camp, granted only that it be so far in that men cannot reach it, as a place of absolute security.

PLATTSBURGH, N. Y., July 6, 1869.

To the Editor of the Transcript: Before plunging into that "howling wilderness" from which some traveller may ne'er return, let me tell those who do not read the tourist's edition of Murray's Adirondacks, that there is no pleasanter jaunt than this to Plattsburgh. You may not have a special car assigned to you as we have had; you may not be watched over—just as if you were (already) a babe in the woods—by the most energetic and courteous of railroad agents, and yet you will be happy. The route from Boston to Burlington, over the Fitchburg, Cheshire and Rutland & Burlington Railroads is one long panorama of picturesque scenery, and the two hours sail up Lake Champlain with the western horizon bounded by the dreamy Adirondacks, is a study for the best of artists. You arrive at Plattsburgh with a ravenous appetite just in time to sit down to the best of well-cooked suppers, and go to bed a happier and better-fed man—or woman.

Then the next day you can take a comfortable steamer down Lake Champlain, cross to Lake George, make the tour of that exquisite sheet of water, return as you came, and get home without effort in four days.

Think of it, and if you take advice gratis, remember him, her or it that generously gives it. K. F.

RUNNING AMOKE.

Everybody has heard of the cheerful Malay custom of running "amoke," but very few Europeans have seen it. A writer in the Temple Bar was, however, fortunate enough to see a Malay with his wild eyes in disagreeable frenzy rolling, and describes the scene in very effective style:—

"The Lanun stood still for an instant. Never through eternity shall I forget his ghastly face, blood-bedabbled, foam-streaked, working with all fell passions, and distorted beyond the horror of a dream. He stared straight in front, past us, to the faint dawn visible above the penang palm trees edging the outer terrace. His eyes were fixed, his hair bristled, his mouth moved horribly! We stood watching him in silent terror. All knew the sign upon his deathly face; but before one step was taken, one arm raised in defence, he seized a heavy Kayan prang, and with a yell almost beyond the compass of human lungs dashed into the crowd. What a scene was that which followed! When can I forget it? There were many young girls there in all the bravery of golden wrist belts and silver gauntlets and armlets of costly shell. They went down in a heap before his blind fury. The air was full of blood, and long severed hair and pitiful screams. Men, brave as savage Bayards, fled in superstitious terror before the amoke. Some dashed off for arms mislaid, others leaped headlong from the high verandah. One sweep he made down the house, overthrowing every soul, without pity for age or sex, or fear for the most renowned. The Pamantuah had been overwhelmed in a crowd of fugitives, who by chance or purpose threw themselves before him and did not regain his feet until the infuriated man reached the further door, but when dashing the blood from his eyes and forehead the great chief marked him standing as in hesitation upon the lintel, he bounded across the prostrate bodies, and, with never a stumble on the slippery mats, rushed at him with upraised sabre. Then the amoke turned to flee, as in most cases these gentlemen will, when boldly confronted. But Pamantuah was too quick. With one strong blow he severed the Lanun's muscles at the knee, and as he fell backward cleft the skull to the neck, and the body fell with a dull thud on to the earth below.

This was the most terrible case of amoke madness I ever saw. It passed in an instant—the outbreak, the horrid noise, the murders and the vengeance, but killed outright, or hurt beyond hope, by slashes of the deadly Kayan sword, were four women and three men, wounded, ten women and four men. Arms and hands had been lopped off at one blow, as with an axe, and I tell you that, though I had heard many a time in Singapore what fearful weapons were those 'parang latoks,' as they call them, I had not believed, nor could any man, one-half of their real terror."

THE BRAVE WOMAN, AND HOW SHE D D IT.

"Bedlam let loose! Pandemonium in rebellion! Chaos turned inside out! What is the reason a man cannot be allowed to sleep in the morning without this everlasting racket raised about his ears? Children crying—doors slamming—I will know the reason of all this uproar!"

Mr. Luke Darcy shut the door of his bed-room with considerable emphasis, and went straight to the breakfast parlor.

All was right and quiet and pleasant there; the coal snapping and sparkling in the grate, the china and silver neatly arranged on the spotless damask cloth, and the green parrot drowsily winking his yellow eyes in the sunny glow of the eastern window—Bedlam plainly wasn't there, and Mr. Darcy went stormingly up stairs to the nursery.

Ah! the field of battle was gained at last. Mrs. Darcy sat in her little low chair before the fire, trying to quiet the screams of an eight months old baby scion of the house of Darcy, while another—a boy of five years—lay on his back, prone on the floor, kicking and crying in an ungovernable fit of childish passion.

"Mrs. Dar—cy!" enunciated Luke, with a slow and ominous precision, "may I inquire what all this means?" Are you aware that it is fifteen minutes past nine o'clock! do you know that breakfast is waiting?"

"I know Luke—I know," said poor, perplexed Mrs. Darcy, striving vainly to lift the rebellious urchin up by one arm, "Come, Freddy, you are going to be good now, mamma is sure, and get up and be washed."

"No—o—!" roared Master Freddy, performing a brisk tattoo on the carpet with his heels, and clawing the air furiously.

Like an avenging vulture, Mr. Darcy pounced abruptly down on his son and heir, and carried him promptly to the closet, and turned the key upon his screams.

"Now, sir, you can cry it out at your leisure, Evelyn, nurse is waiting for the baby. We'll go down and breakfast."

"But, Luke," hesitated Mrs. Darcy, 'you won't leave Freddy there.'

'Won't, I'd like to know why not? It's temper, and nothing else, that is at the bottom of all of these demonstrations, and I'll conquer that temper or I'll know the reason why. It ought to have been checked long ago, but you are so ridiculously indulgent. There is nothing I have so little tolerance for as a bad temper—nothing that ought to be so promptly and severely dealt with.'

'But if he'll say he's sorry, Luke?'

Mr. Darcy rapped sharply at the panels of the door:

'Are you sorry for your naughtiness, young man?'

A fresh outburst of screams and a renewal of the tattoo was the answer.

'I am sure he is sorry, Luke,' pleaded the all-extenuating mother, but Mr. Darcy shook his head.

'Entire submission is the only thing I will listen to,' he said shortly. 'I tell you, Evelyn, I am determined to uproot this temper.

Evelyn, with a dewy moisture shadowing her eyelashes, and a dull ache at her heart, followed her liege lord down to the breakfast table, with as little appetite for the coffee, toast and eggs as might be.

A tall, blue-eyed young lady, with a profusion of bright chestnut hair, and cheeks like rose velvet, was already at the table when they descended, by name Clara Pruyn, by lineage Mrs. Darcy's sister. She opened her eyes rather wide as the two entered.

'Good gracious, Evy, what's the matter?'

'Nothing,' answered Luke, tartly. 'Mrs. Darcy, you appear to forget that I have eaten no breakfast.'

'Something is the matter, though,' said Clara shrewdly. 'What is it, Evelyn! Has Luke had one of his tantrums?'

Luke set down his coffee cup with a sharp 'click.'

'You use very peculiar expressions, Miss Pruyn.'

'Very true ones,' said Clara saucily. Evelyn smiled in spite of herself.

'It's only Freddy, who feels a little cross, and—'

'A little cross! interrupted the indignant husband. 'I tell you, Evelyn, it's quite time that temper was checked. Oh, that parrot! what an intolerable screeching he keeps up! Mary take that bird into the kitchen, or I shall be tempted to wring its neck. Strange that a man can't have a little peace once in awhile! What does all the eggs, Evelyn? I thought I had asked you to see that they were boiled fit for a Christian to eat.'

Mr. Darcy gave his egg, shell and all, a vindictive throw upon the grate. Evelyn's brown eyes sparkled dangerously as she observed the manœuvre, but she made no remark.

'And the plates are as cold as stone, when I've implored you again and again, that they might be warmed. Well, I shall eat no breakfast this morning.

'Whom will you punish most?' demanded Miss Clara. 'Evelyn, give me another cup of coffee; it's perfectly delightful.'

Luke pushed his chair back with a vengeance, and took up his stand with his back to the fire, both hands under his coat tails.

'Please sir,' said the servant, advancing, 'the gas bill—the man says would you settle it while—'

'No!' roared Luke tempestuously. 'Tell the man to go about his business; I'll have no small bills this morning, and I won't be so persecuted!'

Mary retreated precipitately. Clara raised her long brown eyelashes.

'Do you know, Luke,' she said demurely, 'I think you would feel a great deal better if you would do just as Freddy does—lie down flat on the floor and kick your heels against the carpet for a while. It's an excellent escape valve when your choler gets the better of you.'

Luke gave his mischievous sister-in-law a glance that certainly ought to have annihilated her, and walked out of the room, closing the door behind him with a bang that would bear no interpretation. Then Clara came around to her sister, and buried her pink face in Evelyn's neck.

'Don't scold me, Evy, please—I know I've been very naughty to tease Luke so!

'You have spoken nothing but the truth,' said Evelyn, quietly, with her coral lips compressed, and a scarlet spot burning on either cheek. 'Clara, I sometimes wonder how I can endure the daily cross of my husband's temper.'

'Temper!' said Clara, with a toss of her chestnut brown hair. 'And the poor dear fellow hasn't the least idea how disagreeable he makes himself.'

'Only this morning,' said Evelyn, he punished Freddy with unrelenting severity for a fit of ill humor which he himself has duplicated within the last half hour. I am not a moralist, but it strikes me that the fault is rather more to be censured in a full-grown reasoning man than in a child.'

'Evelyn,' said Clara gravely, 'do you suppose he is beyond the power of cure?'

'I hope not; but what can I do? Shut him up as he shut up little Freddy?'

Evelyn's merry, irresistible laugh was checked by the arch, peculiar expression in Clara's blue eyes.

'The remedy needs to be something short and sharp,' said Clara, 'and this dark closet system certainly combines both requisites. Tears and hysterics were played out long ago in matrimonial skirmishes, you know, Evy.'

'Nonsense!' laughed Mrs. Darcy, rising from the breakfast table, in answer to her husband's peremptory summons from above stairs, while Clara shrugged her shoulders and went to look for her work-basket.

Luke was standing in front of his bureau drawer, flinging shirts, collars, cravats and stockings recklessly upon the bed-room floor.

'I'd like to know where my silk handkerchiefs are, Mrs. Darcy?' he fumed. 'Such a state as my bureau is in is enough to drive a man crazy!'

'It's enough to drive a woman crazy, I think!' said Evelyn, hopelessly, stooping down to pick up a few of the scattered articles.

'You were at the bureau last, Luke. It is your old fault!'

'My fault—of course it's my fault!' snarled Luke, giving Mrs. Darcy's poodle a kick that sent him howling to his mistress. Anything but a woman's retorting, recriminating tongue. Mrs. Darcy, I won't endure it any longer!

Neither will I! said Evelyn, resolutely advancing, as her husband plunged into the closet after his business coat, and promptly shutting and locking the door. I think I've endured it long enough—and here is an end of it!

Mrs. Darcy, open the door! said Luke, scarcely able to credit the evidence of his own senses.

I shall do no such thing, said Mrs. Darcy, composedly, beginning to re-arrange shirts, stockings, and flannel wrappers in their appropriate receptacles.

Mrs. Dar—cy! roared Luke, at a fever heat of impotent rage, what on earth do you mean?

I mean to keep you in that clothes press, Mr. Darcy, until you have made up your mind to come out in a more amiable frame of mind. If the system succeeds with Freddy, it certainly ought to with you; I am sure your temper is much more intolerable than his.

There was a dead silence of full sixty seconds in the closet, then a sudden burst of vocal wrath.

Mrs. Darcy, open the door this instant, madam!

But Evelyn went on humming a saucy little opera air where she had left it, letting the soft Italian words ripple musically off her tongue.

'Evelyn, dear!'

'What is it, Luke?' she asked, mildly.

'Please let me out. My dear, this may be a joke to you, but—'

'I assure you, Luke, it's nothing of the kind, it is the soberest of serious matters to me. It is a question whether my future life shall be miserable or happy.'

There was a third interval of silence.

'Evelyn,' said Luke, presently, in a subdued voice, 'will you open the door?'

'On one condition only.'

'And what is that?'

'Ah, ha!' thought the little lieutenant-general, he's beginning to entertain conditions of capitulation, is he? On condition, she added aloud, that you will break yourself of the habit of speaking crossly and sharply to me, and on all occasions keep your temper.

'My temper, indeed!' sputtered Luke. 'Just your temper,' returned his wife, serenely. 'Will you promise?'

'Never, madam!'

Mrs. Darcy quietly took up a pair of hose that required mending, and prepared to leave the apartment. As the door creaked on its hinges, however, a voice came shrilly through the opposite keyhole.

'Mrs. Darcy, Evelyn! wife! wife!'

'Yes.'

'You are not going down stairs to leave me in this place?'

'I am.'

'Well, look here—I promise.'

'All and everything that I require?'

'Yes, all and everything that you require—confound it all!'

Wisely deaf to the muttered sequel, Mrs. Darcy opened the door, and Luke stalked sullenly out, looking right over the top of her shining brown hair.

Suddenly a little detaining hand was laid on his coat sleeve.

'Well?'

'Won't you give me a kiss?'

And Mrs. Darcy burst out crying on her husband's shoulder.

'Well!' ejaculated the puzzled Luke, 'if you aren't the greatest enigma going. A kiss? Yes, a half a dozen of 'em if you want, you kind-hearted little turkey. Do not cry, pet, I'm not angry with you, although I suppose I ought to be.

'And may I let Freddy out?'

'Yes, on the same terms that his papa was released. Evelyn, was I very intolerable?'

'If you hadn't been, Luke, I never should have ventured on such a violent remedy.'

'Did I make you very unhappy?'

'Very.'

And the gush of warm sparkling tears supplied a dictionary full of words.

Luke Darcy buttoned up his overcoat, put on his hat, shouldered his umbrella, and went to the Applegate will case, musing as he went upon the new state of affairs that had presented itself for his consideration.

'By Jove,' he ejaculated, 'that little wife of mine is a bold woman and a plucky one!'

And then he burst out laughing on the steps.

It is more than probable that he left his stock of bad temper in the law buildings that day, for Evelyn and Clara never saw any more of it; and Freddy is daily getting the best of the peppery element in his infantile disposition.

Men, after all, are but children of a larger growth; and so Mrs. Evelyn Darcy had reasoned.

THE DRUM FISH AND ITS RAVAGES AMONG THE OYSTER BEDS.

The beautiful little village of Keyport, by the Jersey shore, on the distant rim of New York bay, with its shell-covered beach, its old homesteads hid away among the foliage of maple and cotton-wood trees, and its hardy, simple hearted population of fishermen, has been recently visited with a great disaster, as great to its industrial and commercial results as the destruction of a cotton mill to a factory village in New England. What the army worm is to the cotton boll, the locust to the virgin corn and clover, so is the drum fish to the young and succulent oyster. The latter, in this instance, has been the fearful and fatal visitor to the waters of the lower bay and the remorseless ravager among the oyster beds of Keyport. Nearly 20,000,000 oysters have already been destroyed and over $100,000 of invested capital have at the same time disappeared.

Forty miles in circuit the oyster beds extend, reaching from Staten Island on one side to Sandy Hook on the other. The ground is staked with tall, strong switches, that nod lazily above the tide and mark each planter's property as accurately as a rail fence. Very few outside oyster boats have any ground left to them now. The old professional planters have monopolized almost all the ground by a process of staking as ingenious as it is profitable. At this season the oysters spawn and spread themselves away from their original resting places. They spawn with a marvellous fecundity, and attach themselves to every conceivable thing at the bottom. An old bootleg, for instance, or a glass bottle, or any other odd incumbrance on the bed of old ocean, has been known to become so covered by the spawn of oysters as to be rendered almost past identification. The planters of the initiated stripe follow the spawn outside of their original grounds, and having discovered that there is an immense migration to the common grounds, where anybody with a pair of tongs can help himself, they go to work and bring from Norfolk, Va., or thereabouts, a small quantity of oysters, which are turned out on top of where the spawn lies, and then the ground is staked and claimed as the property of the enterprising individual who invested in the Virginians. Fortunes have been made in this way, but it is hardly a fair way of making them. The visitation of the drum fish, however, will blight the blooming hopes of many a sanguine planter.

Two weeks ago a drum fish was caught by a Keyport fisherman, who in a spirit of curiosity proceeded to make an anatomical dissection of the curious creature's stomach for the enlightenment of himself and his neighbors. The keen eye of the fisherman very quickly detected a quantity of chewed up oyster shells in the interior of the fish, and having caught him in the vicinity of the beds he mentioned the significant result of his analysis to a few of the leading planters. They paid little or no attention to the very important inferences of this discovery, contenting themselves by supposing that this was but a vagrant specimen of the genus Pogonias Chromis on his travels through strange and uncongenial latitudes. Last Sunday, however, a gentleman of Staten Island took a fancy to row a boat from there across to Keyport—a tolerable long row for a warm day. On the journey he felt astonished to see the water for miles as he believed, covered with schools of drum fish the majority of a dun color, but a considerable sprinkling of red and gray among them. So numerous did they appear that the blades of his oars were impeded by their presence, and he found little difficulty in knocking a dozen or so on the head and capturing them afterwards. On his arrival at Keyport he communicated the intelligence of what he saw to the impassive fishermen of the village. He showed them the specimens in his boat; he ripped open one of the largest, and exposed over a handful of fragmentary oyster shells calmly reposing within, and he concluded by declaring his belief that the oyster beds must be badly used up, and that soft shell clams must be as rare about Keyport as strawberries in November.

The planters gradually opened their eyes as wide as one of their own oysters, and resolved to see for themselves if drums were really beating about their oyster beds—went out in their sloops for a critical investigation into the condition of affairs. The tongs were put down on the first oyster bed they came to and a bushel full of bivalves brought aboard, but every single one was empty, was chewed off at the thin end and its contents sucked down the voracious throat of some prowling drum fish. Twenty beds were visited in succession, but nothing met their astonished eyes but broken oyster shells. Some of the beds, however, had escaped so far—beds on which reposed a dark solid mass of tough old Virginia veterans that the drums might have tried their molars on but relinquished for the younger and softer kind in the immediate neighborhood.

As near as can be ascertained the drums in three vast and powerful divisions came down upon the oyster beds about ten days ago and with a vigor and thoroughness worthy of a better cause slaughtered all the little, innocent, juicy summer oysters and all the big and little bull-nosed clams from Sandy Hook to Staten Island. They charged through nets outspread for other fish and tore them to pieces, defied all creation and laid themselves out for the largest shell fish feed in the records of history. Talk of oysters fried, roasted, broiled and on half shell, but what for exquisite deliciousness could equal the taste of a young and tender oyster sucked out of his shell in ten feet of water. It was this rare treat the drum-fish enjoyed; but if the fishermen of Keyport were more enterprising they would have constructed powerful nets, pursued the drums, captured half a million of their clams and oysters in a digested and more solid form and created a sensation in the Fulton fish market.

DESCRIPTION OF THE DRUM FISH.

The drum is a large, uncouth, ugly looking fish, not often sought after as an object of sport, but sometimes, when least expected, the subject of the angler's toil. Should the latter be lightly rigged, and not on the alert, this singular rover of the vasty deep chews the bottom tackle at his leisure, and the astonished sportsman finds he has to rig himself anew. The black drum when fully grown measures from thirty-five to forty inches in length and from fourteen to sixteen in depth. He spreads from the back wedgewise towards the belly, which is somewhat flat and broad rendering it easy to turn the dead fish upon the belly for examination. He sometimes weighs as high as thirty pounds, but the average is twenty. There is information of one that weighed 101 pounds—a terrible fellow, truly, for the Saddle Rocks and Shrewsburys. The color of the animal—for he is little better to prey upon defenceless shellfish—is a dull silver, like the dross of melted lead, with a faint brassy tinge of ruddy though between the scales the skin is inclined to blackish on the sides and back. The scales of the body are exceedingly large and stiff, horny and marked by radiated and concentric lines. They are so planted in the skin that it is difficult to remove them. Under the scales the silvery hue is most considerable. All the fins incline to reddish, more especially the caudal, pectoral and dorsal. Sometimes the space covered or shaded by the pectoral fin is pale or white. The tail is even and the eyes silvery yellow. On the whole he very much resembles a sheepshead fish. His name of drum has been given on account of the drumming noise he makes immediately after being taken out of water. They swim in numerous shoals in the shallow bays on the south side of Long Island where fishermen during the warm season can find them as numerous as a flock of sheep, with nothing of a sheepish disposition about them. He is also found in the kills and off Comaunipaw. He sometimes takes a stroll up the stream some and although considered a dull fish it takes no trifling skill and activity to capture him. A gentleman fishing in the Harlem river in August of 1844, struck one of these curious fish and had a lively time seeking to make a prize of him. On the first pull the line began to whiz and run out with great rapidity. Finding nearly all his line, 300 feet, run out he took up his anchor stone and away went the boat about a mile down the river. He continued to make a tack, which resulted in his going up the river and down and up again for two hours and a half, until finally the drum was got into shallow water and a seizure made under the gills, but he slipped grasp and made a sudden lurch, taking rod and line away, but he went in the wrong direction and found himself irrecoverably floored upon the grass about twenty yards from the boat. On being weighed at the hotel he proved to be over seventy pounds in weight. A number of fishermen at Keyport, in their attempts to take them, had their nets destroyed and their time sacrificed for nothing; but lots of them have been trapped in nets of more than ordinary strength. One interesting native of Keyport, resolving that posterity should have the benefit of the genuine anatomical formation of a drum's head and jaws, took hold of the last lot brought ashore, and having secured the parts containing the oysters' crushing apparatus, buried them in the sand on the beach, where he calculated they will last for endless ages in a state of good preservation. Very few people ever dream when they see a drum so much resembling an ordinary sheep's head or striped bass, that he contains within him the most extraordinary formation of jaws of any fish extant. These are hidden entirely from view, and their existence could only be ascertained by dissection. The mouth of the fish has a small, fine row of teeth in the upper jaw for despatching casual wayfarers of the finny tribe; but for mashing shell fish, mussels, clams and oysters he is provided away down apparently in his stomach with an upper and lower plate, studded with teeth, like a cobble stone pavement. He gets hold of a poor unfortunate oyster and lets him slide down to his mashing plate where he sets the machinery going that grinds into powder the outer rim of the encased victim. Enough of this being removed for the succulence to escape Mr. Drum pauses for a moment to imbibe the juice, and having satisfied himself with the taste of the soup sucks out the meat and casts back the empty shell on the heap from which he took it. TOTAL ECLIPSE.

One of those interesting phenomena, which silently but eloquently communicate to us some very instructive ideas, as well as facts, will occur on the 7th of August next, commencing at 5.24 P. M. and ending at sunset. Many close observers will be on hand at various points on this continent, to watch this phenomena. Delegations from our national headquarters, and strangers from abroad, as well as all classes of our citizens at their respective homes, will be found watching the astronomical transaction. The naked eye, the opera and field glass and the telescope will be employed on this occasion, which seldom occurs. So regular are the mechanical operations of nature, so vigorously immutable are her laws, so exact is her machinery, that the ponderous orbs of her vast family, tho' rolling upon a floor of immateriality, excel the most exquisitely finished chronometer in accuracy of rotation, revolution, and orbital periods.

Yonder is a familiar orb distant 240,000 miles, speeding from west to east around us, at the rate of 2300 miles an hour, while we are flying 70,000 in the same time, or more than a million and a half miles daily, around the sun, which together with ourselves, and the sun, —indeed our whole solar system—is whirled through space towards a remote region of the Heavens, and yet, with these complicated motions, the mathematician shut within his study, however closely may his windows be blinded, however dark may be the day or night, will figure upon his slate an infallible prophecy, precise in completion, or fulfilment, to the fraction of a second of time, which fulfilment shall be predicted not only days, but months, years and centuries before it shall transpire. Let it be recorded, as were the old Jewish predictions, in a book, and there will be no need of an uttered or implied injunction for future Astronomers, in ages after the prophet's decease to keep up the credit of the institution in the eyes of the people, by referring back to its mouldy pages, and having some initiated successor verify the prophecy. It will attend to its own accomplishment, by means of a memory as tenacious as the tooth of time. The Astronomer with his magic pencil unravels this labyrinthine maze of planetary dance before him, traces the celestial bodies through all the circlets and sinuosities, humors their continual perturbations, as the experienced fisherman humors the hooked leviathan tugging at his bait, till he reduces the trio to a straight line, and then deliberately pronounces the result, announces the year, day, hour, minute, second of the coming obscuration; its progress from beginning to end, how long it will last, in what part of the sky it will occur, and from what part of the earth it will be visible. Wonderful, thrice wonderful, and instructive as admirable are these occasional displays in the orrery of our system, we are but a speck in our little island universe, our corner of the Cosmos. We whose telescopes penetrate so far into the profundity of space, that the eye catches rays of light which have been traveling thirty million years, at the immense velocity of 192,000 miles a second, and this inconceivable distance the same in whatever direction—vertically, horizontally, or obliquely,—we may point the instrument; still this is obviously but an inconsiderable section of the grand whole.

A PRACTICAL SPEECH.—A few days ago Mr. Isaac Keene of Duxbury visited a school situated in the district in which he resides, and on being asked by the committee to talk to the children, proved his practical regard for industry by offering each an acre of good land to plant on shares, he furnishing the manure and plowing the same. At the end of two years he would give a clear title of the land to such as had industriously improved it in a good and farm-like manner.

THE GRAND COMPLIMENTARY CONCERT given by the Weymouth Choral Society to their conductor, C. Henry Webb, Esq., last Tuesday evening, was an entire success, the hall being crammed with a delighted audience, and the entertainment being one of the most brilliant character. The members of the Chorus worked with a will to secure a good house, one of the officers, Mr. Charles G. Thompson, disposing of over 200 tickets, Mr. Richard Hunt also selling above one hundred, while each and every member did all in their power to ensure the success of the testimonial. We have never attended an entertainment where such an entire unanimity of satisfaction was expressed, the variety of entertainment offered being suited to every degree of musical taste. Instrumental and vocal harmonies were rendered with such prodigality that at the low price of admission it was much like buying nightingales at a penny a pair. The Masonic Choir sang sixteen times, each composition rendered by them being vigorously encored, and though such an amount of vocal effort must have tired their patience severely, they entered into the work with such hearty good-will and determined effort to make the entertainment a season of delightful remembrance, that their audience were completely enchanted. They deserve a complimentary expression of thanks from the Society, for their invaluable services, and should they deem it expedient to favor our citizens with a musical entertainment at some future day, they will meet with an enthusiastic and overwhelming reception.

The choruses given by the Society were well presented, the Anvil Chorus being received with so much favor that it was given four repetitions. The "strikers" were from the ranks of the Chorus, six in number—Messrs. Nash, Humphrey, Bowditch, Lincoln and Pratt, and their part of the evening's performance was given with vigor and promptness. Miss Emma Baker, who made her debut as a soloist, was received with flattering applause, and her excellent rendition of Millard's song "Waiting," was a very acceptable addition to the entertainment. Messrs. Barnabee and Whitney were the "biggest guns" in the concert, the wonderful vocal powers of Whitney and the side-splitting comicalities of Barnabee taking the house by storm. Messrs. H. M. Dow and R. B. Raymond, as pianists, were the recipients of much applause, and in the duo "Qui Vive" demonstrated their musical skill to the satisfaction and pleasure of all present. In addition to the usual orchestra, Stetson's Weymouth Band generously volunteered their services, and proved a very effective addition in the Anvil Chorus and Star Spangled Banner, the latter being the closing piece. They also favored the assembly with choice music at the termination of the concert.

QUINCY.—The light observed by some of our people on Thursday evening, and which called out the engines, proceeded from a fire which consumed one of the barns on the estate of Hon. Josiah Quincy at North Quincy, together with its contents, including nine cows, three horses and a quantity of hay.

RANDOLPH.

Mrs. Beulah Hunt, of Randolph, celebrated her one hundredth birth-day last month. She is still hale and hearty, and able to attend to the active duties of life. She has a large number of descendants, some of whom have nearly reached the foot of life's declivity, and are themselves old and gray headed.

The oldest member of the Chorus at the Peace Jubilee, was Dr. Ebenezer Alden, of Randolph, aged 81. He was prompt attending all the rehearsals for two months prior to the Jubilee, which occurred as often as once a week, and was present at his post every day of the Jubilee and sang thorough base. He has been sixty years, a thorough scholar in the science of music, as well as medicine, and sang most of the pieces from great masters, many years ago, which were sung at the Festival."

SILVER WEDDING.—The silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. David Blanchard of East Randolph, was celebrated on the evening of July 7th. Their residence was beautifully decorated with flowers. About one hundred guests were present and a most delightful evening was spent. Among the generous gifts of friends was a silver tea set and a rare old silver spoon.

COHASSET.—The Unitarian church was struck by lightning during the storm of Sunday last, and the spire was entirely destroyed, the interior of the church also being damaged, pews and ceiling smashed, etc. The storm was very severe along shore, as it followed the ebb tide down the harbor and along the coast.

The same flash also shattered the flagstaff on the premises of Mr. Johnson

HINGHAM.

SUDDEN DEATH.—John O. Lovett, Jr. son of the Cashier of the Hingham Bank, went out with a friend upon the beach Saturday afternoon, and after sitting a moment or two fell back and died. He was about twenty years old, and his death was probably caused by heart disease. He left the office on State street, where he was employed, that afternoon, in good health and spirits.

IMPOUNDING CATTLE.—The law recently passed provides as follows:

SECT. I. When beasts are taken up and distrained by a field driver, in pursuance of the provisions of chapter twenty-five of the General Statutes, he may impound them in any suitable place on his own premises; and for the purposes of said chapter he shall be considered a pound keeper, and such place on his own premises shall be considered a town-pound in relation to beasts therein impounded.

This act shall apply only to such towns as shall adopt the same by a vote of the majority of the legal votes.

POST OFFICE SALARIES.—The rates of remuneration to Postmasters in towns in this vicinity are not in comparison with the amount of business transacted. The Weymouth Post master, with a business nearly as large as the office at Quincy, receives but $500, while the Quincy postmaster has $1200. We learn that the department will be petitioned for an increase, as with deduction of rent and other expenses, the pay is reduced to about $300 a year.

PASTORAL CHANGE.—Rev. Olympia Brown, pastor of the First Universalist Church, Weymouth, has received and accepted a call from the Universalist church in Bridgeport, Ct. Salary $1200; Miss Brown has closed her connection with the Society in Weymouth, but will supply the pulpit until the expiration of her year.

ACCIDENTS.—A little daughter of Joshua Binney fell from a ladder on Saturday last, badly fractured one of her arms.

A boy slipped from the roof of a shed last week, and fell about 15 feet into a pile of loose dirt, without sustaining any injury. Had he fallen a few feet beyond he would have struck a pile of stone.

GEOLOGICAL.—One of the scholars of the Second Intermediate School, on Richmond Hill, stumbled over a stone the other day, which was lying in the school-house yard, and stooping to pick it up discovered an impression upon the stone of one of the sea-mosses, distinctly and beautifully marked. The stone which is of the slate formation, was once a habitat of the sea, and presents one of the puzzling problems of geology, in its elevation to a considerable hight above the sea-level.

Rev. D. W. Waldron supplied the pulpit of the Congregational Society at East Abington last Sunday.

Warren W. Barker Esq., for twenty years business agent at East Weymouth of the Iron Works, has retired from his post, and has been succeeded by Mr. Tucker of Boston. Mr. Barker will devote his attention to agriculture, having purchased a farm in Marshfield.

Until the first of September the services at the Union Congregational Church will be at 10 1-2 A. M. and 6 P. M. Sabbath School at 11,42 A. M.

The large shoe manufactory on Pleasant St., South Weymouth, owned by W. & C. Blanchard, has been purchased by C. & P. H. Tirrell, who moved from their old factory on Main Street, this week.

AN HONEST MAN.—Mr. Friend W. Howland, Conductor on the O. C. & N. Railroad, is fast gaining the confidence of the public by his strict integrity. A few days since Miss L. Hardy, of South Weymouth, lost a purse containing about $40, while coming out from Boston on Mr. Howland's train. She did not discover her loss till after leaving the cars. She telegraphed to Mr. H., who restored the purse and contents on his return. We have been informed that Mr. H. has found several pocket-books in the cars, and has in every case returned them to the owners.

APPOINTMENT OF THE LIQUOR COMMISSIONER.—Major. Josiah A. Brodhead of Boston was appointed Saturday, by the Governor and Council, as Liquor Commissioner, under the recent Act created by Legislature. The duties of the Commissioner are to purchase and sell pure liquors to the several city and town agents, for which he is to receive an annual salary of $4000. He is also entitled to receive, on the first day of January of each year, a sum equal to seven per cent. of the amount of capital furnished by him, which cannot exceed the sum of $40,000.

CHURCH RECOGNITION.—It is some 30 years since Rev.'s Messrs. Cobb and Ballou, the Universalist pioneers, first preached at South Weymouth. A few years passed, and a society of this persuasion was organized, and a chapel erected, but no church organization was formed. More than twenty years have passed, and the society having increased in strength and numbers, the present pastor, Rev. Jacob Baker, deemed it expedient to organize a church, and has labored for that end. Last Sunday the church was organized in due form, and Rev. A. J. Patterson, of Boston Highlands, delivered an earnest discourse, devoting a portion of his remarks to a refutation of the common objections against church organization, and closed with an eloquent appeal to friends of the cause to come forward and join the new organization. Sixty-one persons responded to the call, and came forward as the constituent members of the new church. Rev. Benton Smith, agent of the Universalist Publication Society, was present. Joseph Harding and B. F. Locke were chosen Deacons. Rev. Mr. Baker presented the church with a valuable communion service.

The church has a prosperous Sunday School, numbering 225 members, 195 of whom were present last Sunday. The school is under the charge of J. Murray Whitcomb, who makes an efficient Superintendent.

ELIAS HOWE SEWING MACHINE.—Renewed attention is called to this favorite and superior machine, as the public should purchase only what has stood the test of experience and proved by actual use its superiority over all others. Out of nearly one hundred of the original "Elias Howe" machines sold in this vicinity by the agent, Mr. Geo. H. Cunningham, not one has been rejected, but every purchaser has expressed entire satisfaction with their purchase. Be sure and get the genuine "Elias Howe machine, and you will get a good article, warranted in every respect, to be the best in use.

The People's Library, a new magazine, published by Carl Pfirshing, of 142 Fulton St., New York, at $1 per year, is publishing Zimmerman's Wonders of the Primitive World, a work heartily commended by Agassiz, thus bringing information on the most important subjects of human knowledge within the reach of all.

The linen belonging to the Crown of France, and which is used in different palaces, comprises no less than 30,000 pieces. The annual cost of washing is about 120,000 fr. There is in the linen archives damask table services which belonged to Louis XIV., the material being quite common and embossed upon which is an equestrian statue of that monarch. Also the sheets upon which Louis XVIII. died. The Emperor Nepoleon I. used linen made in Holland. The Bourbons used sheets made of batiste, a fine French fabric.

BRAINTREE.

CHURCH RECOGNITION.—Pursuant to an invitation from several members of the First Baptist Church in South Braintree, a Council convened in the Town Hall at 10 o'clock A. M. on Tuesday of this week, to consider the expediency of recognizing these members as an independent Baptist Church. The Council organized by the choice of Rev. J. D. Fulton of Boston for Moderator, and Rev. J. J. Miller of Somerville for clerk.

The following churches were represented: Union Temple, Clarendon St. and Harvard St. of Boston; Perkins St. of Somerville, First Dorchester, Hingham, Malden, Weymouth, Quincy and Methuen. The Council listened to a very full statement, by Rev. Geo. B. Williams and others, setting forth their reasons for desiring a new church organization; after which a general expression of feeling was given, in which it was manifest that the Council thought it would not be wise to have a second Baptist church in South Braintree; yet feeling that something was demanded, advised the brethren to organize as a Baptist Church at North Braintree. They also appointed two of their number to confer with the brethren touching this and report at the afternoon session. The Council then adjourned to reassemble at 1 o'clock P. M.

On the reassembling of the Council the brethren reported that they unanimously concurred in the advice given, and desired to be recognized as a Baptist Church at North Braintree, to be called —The Washington St. Baptist Church, Braintree. Arrangements were then made for the public recognition of the church and the installation of the pastor, which took place on the same afternoon in the following order:

Invocation by Rev. Fitz; Reading the Scriptures and Prayer, by Rev. J. J. Miller; Sermon by Rev. S. W. Foljambe; Prayer of Recognition and Installation by Rev. N. M. Williams; Hand of Fellowship to the church and pastor by Rev. J. Tilson; Charge to the pastor by Rev. Gideon Cole; charge to the church by Rev. J. Chaplin; concluding prayer by Rev. B. W. Barrows; Benediction by the pastor.

The services were well attended, the spirit manifested was kind and cordial, the collation abundant and the whole satisfactory to those present.

THE CEMETERIES of Braintree are small, well filled and wholly inadequate to meet the wants of the present generation. The cemetery in front of Dr Storrs' church, at North Braintree, has been used as a burying ground since February, 1716, when "the most excellently pious and devout Mrs. Elizabeth Niles, wife of Rev. Mr. Samuel Niles," was the first to find sepulchre within this enclosure. Her grave is marked by a rude monumental pile of granite which stands near the west entrance. A plain slate slab informs us that she was the first person buried there. Since her death four generations have been laid beneath the sod, till now the old cemetery is nearly full and is but little used for the burial of the dead. Some fifteen or twenty years ago a small addition was made to the back end of the cemetery, and this has been divided up into small family lots and sold. This already looks crowded. No land adjoining can be purchased for further additions, and no lots within the enclosure are for sale.

The cemeteries at South Braintree are small and crowded. Some of them are on farms—the property of private individuals, and are inaccessible to the public.

It will be seen at a glance that posterity will be forced to supply this deficiency in some way, and that it will be utterly impossible for even members of the present generation to lie down in death by the side of the dust of their ancestors. It is the duty of the citizens of the town to purchase forty, fifty or even sixty acres of ground in some retired spot, where it can be easily visited, lay it out with winding avenues, beautiful walks, and furnish it with modern conveniences. A fine location can easily be found where, not far remote from the scenes of busy life, a beautiful blending of hill and valley, a babbling stream, and plenty of forest trees, will combine with improvements hereafter made, to form a resting-place for this and succeeding generations, which the people will love to visit. Who has public spirit enough to move in this matter? will the Selectmen lay the matter before the people at the next town meeting or leave this to private enterprise? Another generation may not find land as cheap and plenty as at present, and must of necessity if we are inactive lay out grounds as proposed, at greater trouble and expense than we can do it now.

Died suddenly, in Bloomington, Ill., in May, John Beath, Esq., late of Braintree, aged 69 years. Mr. Beath was long a resident of this town and for several years one of the Selectmen. He had recently removed to Illinois where three of his sons reside, in anticipation of spending the evening of his life with them, but in an unexpected hour the summons came for this mortal to put on immortality. He sustained a high reputation for industry, integrity and moral worth, his sudden death will be greatly lamented by an affectionate family and a large circle of personal friends.

The Independent and Wideawakes base ball clubs of South Braintree played a match game for the championship of that town Saturday, resulting in a victory for the Independents—25 to 7.

EAST BRAINTREE.—The good folks, for there are good people in this part of the town, especially those living on Commercial street, and particularly at the corner of Fish Alley,—and their names are not in Webster's Dictionary, either, and they are not from Scotland, either—were grievously disgusted one night lately by an unfrequent calamity. A family (there ought to have been eleven children)—had retired to rest; the second oldest, a nice, yellow-haired boy,—Joseph—being of a meek and timid disposition, slept in the same room with "mother" for mutual protection; the mother like the good woman mentioned in the 31st chapter of Proverbs, had just dropped on her knees—a practice which is somewhat uncommon in these parts—engaged in her evening devotion, and the passage had just rolled from her "Let their table become a snare before them, and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap," when bang against the door came a piece of rock, jerked by some one of those mentioned in the above petition. Joseph was swift to obey when commanded to arise, sprang to where his gun was deposited, and rushing to the door, at the stern command of mother, fired. It is always awkward to fire at a house, especially where it is inhabited, and where the "olive branches" are so thick that they store them under the eaves at night. In this dangerous direction did Joseph point his gun, and though he may have shut his eyes, as some men do when they fire a gun, it is certain those fired at in this instance opened theirs, and in blank dismay rushed out into the street. Now there was a babel of tongues, a marching and counter-marching, numerous attempts to grab throats, but finally a truce was agreed upon by Joseph promising to pay damages. M. E.

GREAT CLOSING OUT SALE OF CLOTHING.—We would invite the especial attention of our readers to the advertisement of Mr. A. H. TIRRELL, a native of this town, who is now with GEO. H. RICHARDS, Esq, in the old Wooden Building at 24 and 25 Dock Square, Boston in today's issue. This establishment is one of the most popular in New England. Every one now-a-days has something to say about the excellent style, finish and durableness of Richards' Clothing. This is not strange. A good article always commands praise. Even Richards' competitors in business are willing to allow that his goods cannot be beat. It would be useless for them not so to do. Richards stands the first and foremost in his line of business. We have railroad kings and steamboat kings and RICHARDS, the King of Clothiers. Call upon Mr. Tirrell, at this famous place, when in the city; we will ensure you good bargains.

THE NEW OCEAN TELEGRAPH.—The Great Eastern has reached the point where the cable is to be taken by a smaller steamer, and the communication will probably be perfected within a few days. Mr. A. R. Brown of Portland, is constructing the shore line from Boston to Duxbury, which is nearly completed. The wire passes through Braintree Abington, ect. The instruments to be used in transmission of messages have been sent to Duxbury, and when one of the keys is touched there to communicate, the line of light will move at Breast within two-tenths of a second. The instrument is the same as is used on the Atlantic cable. The building for the shore office is being built at the Hummock, and the cable is to be laid from Pine Point across the marshes under ground.

MASONIC.—Old Colony Encampment Sir Knight Z. L. Bicknell Commander, have received and accepted an invitation to parade in the procession at Plymouth the 8th proximo, on the occasion of the dedication of the Soldiers' monument in that place, for which the residents of P. are making extensive preparations.

RETIRED.—Geo. H. Monroe, Esq., has retired from his connection with the Suffolk County Journal as editor, after a service of ten years, and has assumed the editorial harness in a more extended sphere. He has evinced so excellent a task in conducting his late charge that we are confident he will make his mark in the new position to which he has been called.

LIQUOR SEIZURES.—Deputy Constable Porter, made a seizure of twenty gallons of liquor on Saturday last, at the Ponpapoag Hotel, in Stoughton; two gallons of whiskey at Michael McArdle's in the same town, and fifty-one gallons of rum at Wm. G. Palmer's, in Randolph. Constable Garey also seized four gallons of whiskey at McArdle's

NORTH WEYMOUTH.

The steamer Massasoit is doing a large business in conveying picnic parties from Boston to Lovell's Grove, averaging we learn, about three parties per week. This grove is the only one on the shore convenient to a steamboat landing, and the enterprise of the owner of the Massasoit, in providing a pleasant seaside resort for the crowded denizens of the city, is meeting with its reward. The travel from North Weymouth to the city has through the season exceeded that from Quincy Point, and from present appearances, the enterprise will be a permanent institution of the North End. A good road is now needed to the wharf, and for this purpose the 'public good and necessity' require a new street instead of expending money on the present narrow way, which would require the removal of two buildings to widen it.

Among the Indians.—Lieut. Herndon tells us that no tribes of aborigines are found in the deepest forests of South America, from the Andes to the Atlantic coast, that do not have and use Dr. Ayer's medicines and Lowell cottons. 'Tremont,' 'Suffolk,' 'Boott,' are seen stamped in large red and blue letters upon their garments, while Ayer's Pills and Cherry Pectoral are among the treasures of their habitations. Their native soil furnishes them all their food and most of their remedies, but they suffer from afflictions which must have the interposition of higher skill. [Sentinel, Liberty, Va.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup.

Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills will cure Consumption, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, if taken according to directions. They are all three to be taken at the same time. They cleanse the stomach, relax the liver and put it to work; then the appetite becomes good; the food digests and makes good blood; the patient begins to grow in flesh; the diseased matter ripens in the lungs, and the patient outgrows the disease and gets well This is the only way to cure consumption.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary Consumption. The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs, nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, and the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To do this, the Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver, so that the Pulmonic Syrup and the food will make good blood.

Schenck's Mandrake Pills act upon the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the ducts of the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved; the stools will show what the Pills can do; nothing has ever been invented except calomel (a deadly poison which is very dangerous to use unless with great care,) that will unlock the gall bladder and start the secretions of the liver like Schenck's Mandrake Pills.

Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative, and the alkali in the Seaweed, which this preparation is made of, assists the stomach to throw out the gastric juice to dissolve the food with the Pulmonic Syrup, and it is made into good blood without fermentation or souring in the stomach.

The great reason why physicians do not cure Consumption is, they try to do too much; they give medicines to stop the cough, to stop chills, to stop night sweats, hectic fever, and by so doing they derange the whole digestive powers, locking up the secretions, and eventually the patient sinks and dies.

Dr. Schenck, in his treatment, does not try to stop a cough, night sweats, chills or fever. Remove the cause, and they will all stop of their own accord. No one can be cured of Consumption, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Canker, Ulcerated Throat, unless the liver and stomach are made healthy.

When there is no lung disease and only Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are sufficient, without the Pulmonic Syrup. Take the Mandrake Pills freely in all billious complaints, as they are perfectly harmless.

If a person has consumption, of course the lungs in some way are diseased, either tubercles, abscesses, bronchial irritation, pleura adhesion, or the lungs are a mass of inflammation and fast decaying. In such cases what must be done? It is not only the lungs that are wasting, but it is the whole body. The stomach and liver have lost their power to make blood out of food. Now the only chance is to take Dr. Schenck's three medicines, which will bring up a tone to the stomach, the patient will begin to want food, it will digest easily and make good blood; then the patient begins to gain in flesh, and as soon as the body begins to grow, the lungs commence to heal up, and the patient gets fleshy and well. This is the only way to cure Consumption.

Dr. Schenck, who has enjoyed uninterrupted health for many years past, and now weighs 225 pounds, was wasted away to a mere skeleton in the very last stage of Pulmonary Consumption, his physicians having pronouncing his case hopeless and abandoned him to his fate. He was cured by the aforesaid medicines, and since his recovery many thousands similarly afflicted have used Dr. Schenck's preparations with the same remarkable success. Full directions accompany each, making it not absolutely necessary to personally see Dr. Schenck, unless patients wish their lungs examined, and for this purpose he is professionally at his Principal Office, Philadelphia, every Saturday, where all letters for advice must be addressed. He is also professionally at No. 32 Bond Street, New York, every other Tuesday, and at No. 35 Hanover Street, Boston, every other Wednesday. He gives advice free, but for a thorough examination with his Respirometer the price is $5. Office hours at each city from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Price of the Pulmonic Syrup and Seaweed Tonic each $1.50 per bottle, or $7.50 a half dozen. Mandrake Pills 25 cents a box. G. C. GOODWIN & CO., 38 Hanover St., Boston, Wholesale agents. For sale by all druggists.

To the Honorable Board of Commissioners of Norfolk County:

The undersigned citizens of Randolph and Weymouth, in said County of Norfolk, respectfully represent that the public convenience and necessity requires that a public road and highway should be laid out and constructed, beginning near the residence of the heirs of Elijah Porter, in said Randolph, and leading in an easterly direction over land of said heirs of Elijah Porter and land of Hannah Faxon, of Martin Rogers, of Simeon White, of Thomas Hollis, and others, of Sanford Hollis, of Thomas Nash, of Roswell Corbin, to Randolph Street, in said Weymouth, near the residence of said Roswell Corbin; thence widening and straightening said Randolph Street in said Weymouth, to near the residence of Harrison Carroll, thence laying out and constructing a road and highway over land of said Harrison Carroll, and land of Rachel Rogers out to said Randolph Street, near the westerly side of a Dam to Weymouth Great Pond; thence widening and straightening said Randolph street to Pond Street or the Depot road in South Weymouth.

Your petitioners therefore request you to view the premises and lay out and widen and straighten the same, or such parts thereof, as in your judgement the public convenience and necessity may require.

And as in duty bound will ever pray,

JACOB WHITCOMB, and 209 others.

Randolph, March, 1869.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

NORFOLK, ss. At a meeting of the County Commissioners, begun and held at Dedham, within and for said County of Norfolk, on the fourth Tuesday of June, A. D., 1869.

On the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, that the County Commissioners will meet at the South Weymouth Railroad Station of the Old Colony and Newport Railroad Company, in Weymouth, on Tuesday, the seventeenth day of August, A. D. 1869, at ten o'clock A. M., and thence proceed to view the route described in said petition, and hear and act thereon.

And that an attested copy of said petition, with this order thereon, be served upon the Clerks of the Towns of Randolph and Weymouth, thirty days at least before the time appointed for said view, and also that a like copy be published three weeks successively in the East Norfolk Register and the Weymouth Gazette, newspapers printed at Randolph and Weymouth, respectively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before said view, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in Randolph and Weymouth, aforesaid fourteen days at least before said view, that all persons and corporations interested for or against said petition may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.

FOUTZ'S
CELEBRATED
HORSE AND CATTLE POWDERS.

This preparation, long and favorably known, will thoroughly revivigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as LUNG FEVER, GLANDERS, YELLOW WATER, HEAVES, COUGHS, DISTEMPER, FEVERS, FOUNDER, LOSS OF APPETITE, AND VITAL ENERGY, &c. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite—gives a smooth and glossy skin—and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine looking and spirited horse.

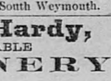

To keepers of Cows this preparation is invaluable. It is a sure preventive against Rinderpest, Hollow Horn, etc. It has been proven by actual experiment to increase the quantity of milk, and cream twenty per cent. and make the butter firm and sweet.

In fattening cattle, it gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

In all diseases of Swine, such as Coughs, Ulcers in the Lungs, Liver &c., this article acts as a specific. By putting from one-half a paper to a paper in a barrel of swill the above diseases will be eradicated or entirely prevented. If given in time, a certain preventive and cure for the Hog Cholera.

TOBACCO.
Save your money and restore your health, by using Dr. Bern's Antidote for Tobacco. This is not a substitute but a cure for Smoking, Chewing and Snuff-taking. Few persons are aware of the terrible effects of the noxious weed on the human system. Dyspepsia, Headache, Disease of the Liver, Sallow Complexion, Costiveness o the Bowels, Loss of Memory, and other diseases are the afflictions brought on by its use. The Antidote is purely vegetable and harmless. It acts as a tonic on the system, purifies the blood, and enables a person to digest the heartiest food. Samples sent free for 50 cents—$3 per dozen. PIQUANTS.

Shower of brass—'reigning belles.'

Men of soaring propensit'es—balloonists.

A relative position—Standing godfather.

Cottages in miniature—Saratoga trunks

Persons given to abstraction—pickpockets.

The canal everybody travels on—the alimentary.

Jinks is desirous to know whether a man would be guilty of Bigamy by marrying the double-headed girl.

'What are those flat looking fish?' asked a customer of a fish-dealer.

'Shad,' was the reply.

'Beg pardon, I thought they were SHAD-ows', returned the customer, with provoking gravity.

A wag objects to Indian suffrage on the ground that red men are addicted to tampering with the polls.

A little boy was once asked if he had any liking for cats. "Oh, yes," he replied, "I like them very much—to throw stones at."

An engineer resigned his position on a Western Railroad in disgust, because, as he said, it consisted of nothing but the right of way and two streaks of rust.

A friend relates the following:

A mile or two from town he met a boy on horseback crying with cold.

'Why don't you get down and lead him? that is the way to keep warm.'

'No,' said the boy, 'it's a b-b-bor-rowed hoss and I'll ride him if I freeze'

Runaway couples in San Francisco go out in a tug and are married in the harbor; then comes the tug of war.

People speak of the sun's breaking out. Will this account for the spots on its face?

The latest thing out—The gas, when it is turned off, and everybody has gone to bed

Why is a fine specimen of handwriting like a dead pig? Because it is done with the pen.

A BOY, when asked to what business he would wish to be brought up, replied, "I will be a trustee, because, ever since papa has been a trustee, we have had pudding for dinner."

THE following advice is offered by an exchange to people who pine for a supply of great men: "If you would select a youth who is likely to make his mark in the world, take one who is earting mud in a clam-shell wagon."

'PLEASE accept a lock of my hair,' said an old bachelor to a widow, handing her a large curl—'Sir, you had better give the whole wig.'—'Madam, you are very biting, indeed, considering that your teeth are porcelain.'

KAKES.

There are many kinds of kake—some of one kind, and some not.

The "ho-kake" is particularly adapted to that kind of society who have nothing to bake, and nothing but a hoe to bake it on. It is a native of "westward, ho!"

Ice kakes is good enough to weigh down lemon peels in dog days; also to hold butter that would otherwise travel on the plate; also tooth ache.

Grease kake, otherwise called dough nut, alias "crulls," is made by holding hunks of doe, by the fingers, in bilin' hot grease. They are a very common but unhealthy beverage.

"Pound kake" is my favorite. I always aim to get one that runs eighteen to twenty oz. to the pound—there is more good eating in it for the money.

Sponge kake is like pound kake, only it is a little different, and don't run so many oz. to the pound, though an unpraktikal eye would think it the cheaper kake.

Oil kake is the squeezins of a oil mill. They are good for cows' milk and fat horses. It is never knoed in a well regulated dairy, as it makes the hair too slick, and rain having no effect on the milk.

"Bride's kake." I don't know much about this kake, as I never was a bride. But I suppose they make it very sweet.

FURIOUS FELINES.

On a pine wood shed, in an alley dark. where scattered moonbeams sifting through a row of tottering chimneys, and awning torn and drooping fell, strod back and forth, with stiff and tense drawn muscle and peculiar tread a cat.

His name was Norval; on yonder neighboring shed his father caught the cats that came in squads from streets beyond Bridge, in search of food and strange adventure.

Grim war he courted; and his twisted tail and spine upheaving in fantastic curve and claws distended, and ears flatly pressed against a head thrown back defiantly, told of impending strife.

With eyes agleam, and screeching blasts of war, and steps as silent as the falling dew, young Norval crept along the splintered edge, and gazed a moment through the darkness down, with tail swag triumphantly.

Then with an imprecation and a growl perhaps an oath in direst vengeance hissed, he started back, and crooked in body like a letter S. or rather a U inverted stood in fierce expectancy.

'Twas well. With eyeballs glaring and ears all aslant, and opened mouth, in which two rows of fangs stood forth in sharp and dread conformity, slow up a post from out the dark below a head appeared.

A dreadful tocsin of determined strife young Norval uttered; then, with face unblanched, and moustache standing straight before his nose, and tail flung wildly to the breeze, stepped back in cautious invitation to the foe.

Approaching the other and with preparations dire, each cat surveyed the vantage of the field. Around they walked, with tails uplifted and backs high in air, while from their mouths, in accents hissing with consuming rage, dropped brief but awful sentences of hate.

Thrice round the roof they went in circle, each with eye upon the foe intently bent; then sidewise moving, as is wont with cats, gave one long-drawn, terrific, savage yaw and buckled in.

The fur flew. A mist of hair hung o'er the battle field. High 'bove the din of passing wagons rose the dreadful tumult of the struggling cats. So gleamed their eyes in frenzy, that to me, who saw the conflict from a window near, naught else was plain but fiery stars that moved in orbits most eccentric.

An hour they struggled in tempestuous night, then faint and fainter grew the squall of war, until all sound was hushed. Then went I forth with lantern and the field surveyed. What saw I?

Six claws, one ear, of teeth perhaps a handful, and, save fur, naught else except a solitary tail. That tail was Norval's—by a ring I knew't. The ear was—but we'll let the matter pass. That tale will do without the ear.

One of the religious papers gives notice that "whoever sends poetry, essays, arguments, sermons, dissertations or 'articles' to this office without taking the precaution to correct most of the bad spelling and all the more glaring grammatical blunders, may rest in the comfortable assurance that they have been forwarded to the paper mill."

The most difficult ascent—Getting up a subscription.

The ray that always lights up a woman's despair—rai-ment.

The attention of reflecting invalids is invited to the following observations. The questions are such as the sick would be likely to ask; the replies are simple facts clothed in language that everybody can understand.

WHY
is Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient adapted to the cure of Indigestion and its concomitants?

BECAUSE
It tones the membranes of the stomach and promotes the secretion of the gastric juice, the solvent which converts the food into a life-sustaining agent; and also because it relieves the bowels without weakening them, and moderately stimulates the bile-producing organ.

WHY
is it recommended for obstructions in the kidneys and other renal diseases, and for dropsy?

BECAUSE
it combines the properties of a mild diuretic sudorific with those of a local and general invigorant, and by promoting perspiration relieves the blood of a large amount of morbid matter which would otherwise vitiate the secretions.

WHY
is it prescribed for rheumatism, and claimed to be eminently beneficial in all the varieties of that disease?

BECAUSE
rheumatism is caused by the inflamatory action of acid in the blood upon the fibres, membranes and ligaments; and the salines of the Seltzer Aperient being absorbed into the veinous system tend to neutralize the vitiating principle.

WHY
is it given by the faculty in all disorders of a febrile character?

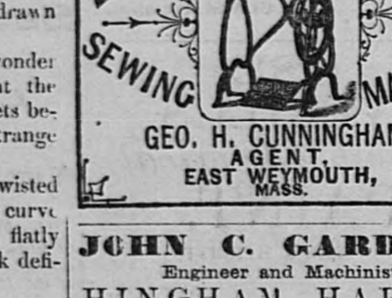

BECAUSE
it opens the pores, reduces the temperature of the body, calms the nerves, and acts as a moderate evacuant, and has a refreshing effect upon the whole system. Of all fever drinks it is the most cooling and delightful.

In this brief summary of the virtues of Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperent, nothing is set forth which is not justified by testimony of competent medical men. 9-12

Musical Instruments at Cost.

The subscriber having made arrangements with the large manufacturing establishment of Baker & Randall,
Manufacturers of Musical Instruments in Providence, R. I.,
is now prepared to furnish every variety of Reed Instruments at very short notice. He will keep an assortment of New and Second hand Instruments
FOR SALE OR TO LET.

Instruments let with privilege of purchasing at the expiration of term, deducting three fifths of the amount of rent. All of the instruments will be sold from 15 to 20 per cent. lower than the retail price list of any first class manufacturer in the State. Having also made arrangements with Piano Forte
manufacturers
in Boston, by which he can buy at the Lowest Cash Prices, he will share the large discount made for cash, to regular agents, with any one who will give him a call. A sample Piano may be seen by calling on the subscriber, or FRANCIS AMBLER, Esq.—Illustrated Price List also may be seen. Call before purchasing elsewhere, and save FIFTY OR ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS. Old Instruments taken in exchange for new ones.
These Instruments are direct from the manufacturers, and will be sold at about the wholesale price, and warranted to give entire satisfaction.
Also, PICTURES of all descriptions FRAMED TO ORDER.
GEORGE S. BAKER. Weymouth Landing.

EASE AND COMFORT.—

THE BLESSING OF PERFECT SIGHT.
There is nothing so valuable as PERFECT SIGHT, and PERFECT SIGHT can only be obtained by USING PERFECT SPECTACLES! the difficulty of procuring which is well known.

Messrs. LAZARUS & MORRIS,
Oculists and Opticians,
HARTFORD, CONN., MANUFACTURERS
Of the celebrated
Perfected Spectacles,
Have, after years of Experience, Experiment, and the erection of costly machinery, been enabled to produce that GRAND DESIDERATUM, Perfected Spectacles! which have been sold with unlimited satisfaction to the wearers in Massachusetts,
Rhode Island,
Connecticut,
New Hampshire,
Vermont and Maine,
During the past nine years.
Those Celebrated Perfected Spectacles never tire the eye, and last many years without change!
Messrs. LAZARUS & MORRIS have appointed
MR. L. T. BROWN,
JEWELLER,
SOUTH WEYMOUTH, MASS.,
their Agent in this vicinity.

Notice.
PERSONS wishing to have CANE SEAT Chairs RE-SEATED, can have them done by leaving them with AMOS B. GAMMONS,

WEYMOUTH
Photograph Gallery.
L. W. COOK
TAKES this opportunity to inform his friends and the public that he still continues in the Photographic Business, at the old established and well known Gallery, where he will be happy to receive and fill all orders for
PHOTOGRAPHS AND TINTYPES.
CARD PICTURES taken with all the late improvements. All kinds of Photographic Likenesses, from the smallest Tintypes to Life Size Portraits, executed in the best style.
Especial attention paid to copying
From Old Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, &c. This branch of the business he makes a Specialty, and would call attention to the fact that he seldom fails to give Perfect Satisfaction, even in Copying from Old Pictures which have been injured by stains or otherwise, and spoiled in themselves.
Many having copies of deceased friends are unwilling to trust them in the hands of a Photographer to copy, for fear they may be lost or injured. The most extreme care will be used by him with such pictures while in his hands. He employs one of the best Artists in Boston, who finishes his pictures in India Ink or Colors equal to any city work, and at less prices.
A good variety of Frames on hand, Gilt, Rosewood, Black Walnut, Rustic, &c.
Please call and see for yourselves.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a
HAIR DRESSING,
nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,
For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

Singers and Public Speakers find great protection from it.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

Bronchitis is generally cured by taking the Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses.

For a Cough and Cold, no better remedy can be had. Take small doses three times a day and put the feet in warm water at night, until the disease is broken up.

For Influenza, when it affects the throat or lungs, take the same course.

For Whooping Cough, give small doses three or four times a day.

For Croup, give large and frequent doses until the disease is overcome.

No family should be without the Cherry Pectoral on hand to protect them, in case of attack, from the above complaints. Its timely use often spares the patient a great amount of suffering and risk, which he would incur by waiting until he could get other aid. Parents, keep it in your houses for the exigencies that arise. Lives dear to you may be saved by it.

So generally are its virtues known, that we need not publish certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that the best qualities it ever possessed are strictly maintained.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold all round the world.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SHERIDAN'S RIDE.

The July number of Captain Mayne Reid's excellent magazine, "Onward," has the following thrilling and truthful reminiscence:—

Sheridan had led his army further up the Valley of the Shenandoah than Union infantry had ever penetrated before, and after sending the Johnnies "whirling through Winchester" on the tenth of September, and three days later dislodging them from their eyrie at Fisher's Hill, his troops had fully rested and recuperated themselves by a ten or twelve days encampment in the neighborhood of Harrisburg and Mount Crawford.

At this time camp life was varied by rumors, first, that there was no great force of the enemy in our front, only some guerillas; then, that a powerful body confronted us; that Longstreet had arrived with Kershaw's and Anderson's divisions—taken from the defences of Richmond—and had assumed personal command; then, that we were going back to Petersburg; then, that we should winter in the valley, and such like contradictory statements, which soldiers in camp are continually circulating and for which no one is responsible.

A dark, blustering night succeeded the sunset of October 18, a sunset so warm and fervid that after it had kissed "good night" to the distant hills the woods and fields seemed suddenly cast into a chill sombre gloom. As no moon showed itself that night, and the scowling clouds at intervals veiled the blinking stars, the troops went to their tents earlier than was their custom. Only a few gossippers remained around the camp fires smoking and telling stories. But as the gusty wind whisked the flames about their feet, and puffed the smoke and the snapping spiteful sparks into their faces, gossipping became rather unpleasant, and they, too, after a short time, one by one, stole off to their sleeping places.

The wind continued to bluster through the night, but as morning approached it subsided, and a light mist like a silken veil stretching across the mountain tops from east to west, canopied the valley and enfolded in its chilly shroud the white tents seen spectre-like along the bleak, brown slopes and ridges.

The dark sky had just begun to assume that cold, leaden color along the east, which heralds the dawn, while the fog appeared grayer and damper. The valley pike lay between the Sixth corps' left and the right of the nineteenth, almost at right angles to their lines, and stretching away northward to Winchester—a distance of eighteen or twenty miles.

From the level on which our corps, the sixth, lay, the ground rose in terraced undulations towards the road, and there becoming a bold bluff rolled away for perhaps half a mile, beginning again to undulate in its descent towards the Shenandoah and the creek—both of which streams were skirted by a growth of young oaks, gum trees and cedars.

About five o'clock the report of a single gun came bellowing with a flat prolonged roar from the left, but the sound was not loud enough to be heard in the camp of the Sixth corps, except by the guards and pickets, or a few wakeful dozers. My comrades and myself were among the latter, and lay awake chatting in our tent, for we had become too chilled to sleep, owing to an insufficiency of blankets.

The boom of the gun came from the direction of the river, and howled on till it was lost among the mountain ridges to the west. Then another report, accompanied by half a dozen rifle shots, that in comparison seemed like the clapping of a child's hands, and again a brief interval of silence.

Soon after, a third low, growling reverberation, and another pause, and then two or three "booms" succeeding one another so rapidly that their echoes blended together, and at length became mixed with the crackling trill of an irregular discharge of musketry.

Away from the actual scene and vicinity of that firing it is doubtful whether a hundred men, not including guards and pickets, were astir at the time—the army as a whole being ensconced beneath the meagre shelter of the tents. There was no apparent fury in the fight going on, and the sound seemed so muffled as to create the belief that it was full five miles off.

My chum and I, seated within our tent near the turnpike road, simultaneously queried each other, "you hear those guns?" "What's up now?"

Gus intimated that we had better turn out." I suggested that it was "only Custer burning around with a couple of guns after some rebel guerillas;" but Gus didn't take my view of it.

He got up, stepped out of the tent, and in a few moments a lurid light flared into it and over my face. It at first startled me; but on raising my head I saw Gus on his hands and knees blowing vigorously at the embers of the fire, upon which he had piled some fresh sticks. Feeling no inclination to get up so early, my head once more sought my knapsack, and I soon dropped into a sort of doze, during which, as I lay with my ear close to the ground, I heard several shots fired in rapid succession, without heeding them. I was soon aroused by Gus, tugging away at my blanket, and telling me I had better get up, as there was "going to be a fight."

The musketry firing on the left was by this time continuous, like the sputtering of a sun-shower, while the boom of artillery came only at intervals, resembling big drops among the smaller spray.

I got up, smoothed my hair through my fingers and put on my cap. My toilet was then completed, as I had slept with my clothes on to keep out the chill. I might have washed my face had there been water. But there was only sufficient in my canteen for a pannikin of coffee, and the spring was a good way off.

Gus was "getting his traps together," so I placed my coffee cup on the fire, and took "a few hard-tack" and a piece of pork out of my haversack. While at Millwood I had foraged a quart jar of apple butter from the closet shelf of a reb sympathizer, and Gus, spoon in hand had already commenced making demonstrations upon it.

While all these little breakfast preparations were going on, the morning dawned; the misty atmosphere turning a dull daylight gray color, and the fog becomming less dense. My comrade sat on his knapsack near the fire, plying his spoon in the apple butter pot, and suggested that I had better "pack up," adding, "we'll have to git out of this 'fore long I reckon."

He soon became more serious and urgent; and I noticed that the distant firing was gradually becoming more frequent and distinct—because the air was less dense, I thought from the fog having begun to lift.

I was very incredulous that morning; but yielding to the solicitations of my comrade, I at length packed my knapsack; and, returning from the tent stood warming my hands over the fire.

About an hour had elapsed since the time of our hearing the first gun, and we were wondering what corps was engaged, when a tall, gaunt man came running up to the fire. He was in the dress of a soldier, but without rifle or belts, and wearing a gray citizen's cap and a haversack, slung over his shoulder. He rubbed his hands with an appreciative relish as he stooped over the fire; and then, turning to me he grumbled out, "They're givin' us hell over there, an't they?"

"Giving who hell?" I queried.

"Our corps," he replied.

I looked at his cap; but seeing no badge on it, again queried, "What corps do you belong to?"

"Crook's."

"Crook's!" I repeated, in anxious surprise. "Do you mean to say that the rebs are driving you?"

"Are they driving us?" he muttered, slewing himself around, and pointing to the left of our line. "You see 'em comin' yonder?"

I looked in the direction indicated, peering anxiously through the mist, which had assumed a yellow tinge, as the sun's earliest rays struck the tops of the hills beyond. There were the shadowy outlines of men fleeing in confusion through the haze over the undulating crests of the ridges, and there, too, the spectral forms of others evidently in pursuit!

The pursuers were not following swiftly, but pausing at intervals; and as they paused I saw red sparks of fire leap up, and become extinguished by the damp misty air, followed by corresponding cracks, while occasionally the rifle barrels glistened like dew upon cobwebs swaying in the sunlight

Between the two head quarters the ground rolled away to the northward, level for three or four miles, with clumps of trees here and there, and flanked on either side by a slight elevation of the land. It was up this level channel that the scared troops from the left of our line were fleeing, although, singularly enough, this route led them further and further from the pike, which should have been considered the proper line of retreat. But the enemy in attacking had struck our left, with the intention, no doubt, by pressing heavily, to double it up on the rear centre, and so get between us and Winchester. Therefore, when Crook's corps gave way, it exposed the left and rear of the nineteenth, leaving this corps no alternative but to retire. This it did, but not without offering resistance; and to their efforts may perhaps be attributed the fact of our corps, the Sixth, not being thrown into complete disorder. Under the circumstances it well might have been, though it did belong to that stubborn and often defeated, but never demoralized, old stock—the army of the Potomac.

In a few minutes, then, the Sixth had formed a line of battle that stretched across the fields, showing front both to our retreating troops and the advancing tide of the enemy. So precipitate was the flight of the former, and so panic struck were the fugitives, that they actually rushed through between our formed files, where many of them received hard knocks for thus disturbing the doubtful equanimity of the corps with whom they collided.

The fog had now dispersed, and the sun was shining brightly. We were in the fields about a mile north of Middletown, and had held this position for nearly an hour. Looking back along the road that sloped up toward Newtown, both it and the adjacent fields were dotted with stragglers, servants leading pack mules, wounded men getting to the rear, with a good many of that peculiar class of soldiers known to their worthier comrades as "coffee boilers." The general direction of this sporadic tide was toward Newtown, the goal being probably Harper's Ferry, which was upward of forty miles further on from the enemy.

A few wagons were ambling diagonally over the fields toward the road, as though retiring from the flanks; but it was strikingly notable that there was nothing, man or beast, moving back from the village to the line of the army. The firing in our front was now becoming exceedingly quick and severe, as if the enemy was making use of our own guns, captured by them in the early movement of the morning. On the other hand, our artillery fire seemed, as it was in fact, proportionately weaker from the loss of at least fifteen pieces. Occasionally our men glanced behind them toward Newtown, muttered imprecations leaped from their lips, directed against the "bummers" and coffee boilers, that could be seen constantly and very distinctly retiring to the rear, as there was an uninterrupted view all the way up to the village.

Just at this crisis the First Rhode Island Battery, or a section of it, galloped at a splendid pace close along the rear of our line, and was soon lost to our view in a ravine beyond, in which there was a tract of timber. In a few seconds after a terrific "slumm" came booming out of the woods, within two hundred yards of our flank, while a cushion of snow-white smoke was seen puffing up over the trees.

"Good God!" cried Strockey, "they are getting range of us with shell."

Another concussion of the air and a "slumm" as before, followed by the cloud of smoke, made him knit his brows and compress his lips. "Slumm" again, and as the smoke cleared I raised myself slightly on my hands, for we were lying down under orders, and saw the gleam of a burnished Parrott, and a rammer, with sponging rod, on the shoulder of a blue blouse. Storckey saw it too, and with a yell shouted out:—

"It's the Rhode Island Battery."

How those splendid fellows served their guns! And the guns seemed to understand what was required of them, for never before was metal known to speak more opportunely than those pieces did.

"Spang! spang! spang!" and a metallic twang and whirring whistle was heard at every discharge, as the iron lipped dogs belched out their gyral tongues of steel. It was worth a division of reinforcements to hear it, for it was the first artillery we had seen that morning on the Union side, while, although we did not see them, we knew from experience that the rebs had used theirs with terrible destructive effect.

Just then a faint cheer was heard afar off in our rear, as from the stragglers along the Newtown road. Gus, glancing over his shoulder, growled out mechanically, "Listen to those bummers; where's the provost guard?"

I too looked back along the pike, and saw the tide of "strags" and retreaters moving on as before, all going northward. Everything not with us at the front was retiring in the same direction—toward Newtown. No, not everything; a single horseman was seen galloping down the slope of the hill from Newtown and toward us. There was only one and in all likelihood my eye was attracted to the individual—some wagon master I supposed him to be—because he was travelling in an opposite course to the crowd, through the thick of which he was making way.

The glance of others may have been momentarily arrested, as was mine, by the sight of this solitary horseman; but it was so unimportant a matter that no one thought of calling a comrade's attention to it.

The firing in our front had now become exceedingly severe and we expected every moment that the enemy would show themselves, charge and attempt to dislodge us from our position. But they did not then nor even afterward in that valley. Their opportunity of "driving" us out of the "garden of Virginia" was lost, for it was open only about ten minutes longer.

While we lay waiting for them a dozen or more voices in our rear whined out a second feeble, disjointed "H-a-a-y! hoo-ray!" and there was some change in the aspect of the crowd straggling along the road and in the fields nearest to Newtown. I noticed that the rider already mentioned had turned off the hard dusty causeway and was galloping along the road margin upon the brown turf. But he was still coming toward us, while the groups as he passed them either halted or turned and followed, by twos and threes, in his wake, as if returning to the army. The horseman could be seen at intervals, to take off his hat and wave it above his head, while the stragglers cheered in response.

Some one in our ranks remarked, "that fellow's got a heavy load of 'commissary' inside his shirt, he has."

Still at a gallop, his horse came on, with long, sweeping lunges, though he was not galloping fast, his pace being more noticeable for its stretch than quick movement. A great number of our troops had now noticed him, but still paid him only the attention that might be given to a drunken man making a show of himself on horseback.

At this time a second horseman appeared upon the hill just emerging from Newtown, and a full half mile to the rear of the first. He too seemed to be riding at a hard gallop, as if trying to overtake the other. Just then attention was recalled to the front by a spluttering fusilade from the enemy's skirmish line that was being thrown forward, and as they came slowly on we gave them a volley in return. Then a single shell from the battery on our right dropped and burst in their midst, causing them to retire, and as they withdrew two or three more shells passed over their heads and exploded behind a little ridge, under cover of which we believed them to be massing.

A cheer again rising in our rear, but this time stronger and more continuous, caused us to look back. The solitary horseman was within five hundred yards of us, and herds of stragglers were still straggling, but they straggled to the front—a manœuvre so unexpected as to astonish the oldest of our veterans. And cutting through among them down the Newtown slope came half a dozen other horsemen strung out in race-course order, but no two of them widely separated, as they forged forward, now one leading, than another, along the gray roadway. The second rider was nearly a mile ahead of these, while himself a good half mile behind the foremost, who was now rapidly approaching our lines.

As he came close enough for his features to be distinguished, we could see they were animated to the highest pitch of anxiety and earnestness, and with his body thrown forward he appeared to grasp the horse's ribs convulsively between his knees. The horse, a splendid black charger, was evidently laboring, as the long swinging gallop and distended neck plainly testified.

In another instant the strange horseman came sweeping up our lines, a dozen yards to the left of where I and my comrade stood. As he approached he once more raised his hat and waved with great apparent energy; but we could not hear his voice amidst the firing and confusion.

There was nothing in his dress or appearance to have attracted particular attention. He wore the uniform of an officer—the coat double breasted, with buttons in threes; while his hat was a full dress army one with the folded crown. His attitude was that of a man crouching forward, and half-kneeling on the ribs of his horse, his left hand clutching the bridle reins with a grasp of iron. A rough heavy beard, without any flowing qualities, but rather inclined to stubbishness, concealed his jaws and neck, adding to the effect of the crouched attitude; and as he looked right and left, from under the broad slouched brim of his beaver, the remarkable expression of his features was that of a severe energy. But as he swept athwart our line, once more raising his hat and waving it in the air, that bright dark eye seeming to flash upon every thing at once made him remembered. That man had been seen scores of times by that army, surrounded by a glittering staff and followed by a "swallow tail" pennon—his headquarters flag, of red and white, with two stars. The troops recognized him now, and a hundred voices shouted as from one throat:—

"It's Sheridan—hooray!"

A cry of exultation rose quickly along the lines as he wheeled back through them, and swept on over hillock and down the hollow to the right. That staunch cordon of the Sixth, that, but a moment before, had not heart to give a single cheer in the face of the overwhelming foe, hammering at them for five long hours, now found outlet for their feelings in mingled shouts of joy, defence, and revenge.

Had Michael with his legions come swooping from the clouds to sustain us in that fearful fray, his advent could not have inspired greater confidence and enthusiasm into the ranks of our faltering line.

Away to the right went the sweating black steed, and both he and his rider were soon lost to our sight, but the prolonged cheer, louder at intervals, told how they were greeted, till the shouts of salutation grew fainter and fainter, at length dying away in the distance.

It is not necessary to tell particularly what followed. All know how "Little Phil" assumed control of the retreating army, how the lines were reformed, and how, about one o'clock in the afternoon, we commenced advancing on the enemy. Completely turning the tables, a charge was made by our cavalry swooping in on both flanks. Again we charged, and again the enemy resisted and retired. A third time they essayed to stay our onset, but in vain. Our first charge had astonished, our second staggered, and our third crushed them. Our cavalry doubled up their flanks, and at sunset the victors of the morning were a routed rabble.

FLIRTING.

Your flirt of the cunningly simple kind, who smiles so sweetly and seems so flatteringly glad to see you when you come, who takes all your presents and acted expressions of love with the most bewitching gratitude and effusion, even she, so simple as she seems to be, slips the thread and will not be caught if she does not wish to be caught. At the decisive moment when you think you have secured her, she makes a bound and is away; then turns round, looks you in the face, and with many a tear and pretty asseveration will declare she never understood you to mean what you say you have meant all along; and that you are cruel to dispel her dream of a pleasant and harmless friendship, and very wicked indeed because you press her for a decision. Yes, you are cruel, because you have believed her honest; cruel, because you did not see through the veil of flattery and insincerity in which she clothed her selfishness; cruel, because she was false. That is woman's logic when brought to book, and forced to confess that her pretended love was only flirting and that she led you on to your destruction simply because it pleased her vanity to make you her victim. Then there are flirts of the open and rollicking kind, who let you go far, very far indeed, when suddenly they pull up and assume an offended air, as if you had wilfully transgressed known and absolute boundaries—girls and women who lead you on, all in the way of good fellowship, to knock you over when you have got just far enough to lose your balance. That is their form of the art. They like to see how far they can make a man forget himself and how much stronger their own delusive enticements are than prudence, experience and common sense. And there are flirts of the artful and 'still water' kind, something like the male flirts spoken of just now; sentimental little pusses—perhaps pretty young wives with uncomfortable husbands—whose griefs have by no means soured or scorched, but just mellowed and refined them. Or they may be of the sisterly class, creatures so very frank, so very sisterly and confiding and unsuspicious of evil, that really you scarcely know how to deal with them at all. And there are flirts of the scientific kind: women who have studied the art thoroughly, and with the grave attention due to an art; and who are adepts in the use of every weapon known—using each according to circumstances and the nature of the victim, and using each with deadly precision. From such may a kind Providence deliver us! As the tender mercies of the wicked, so are the scientific flirts—the women and the men who play at bowls with human hearts, for simply the stakes of a whole life's happiness.

It used to be an old schoolboy maxim that no real gentleman could be refused by a lady, because no gentleman could presume beyond his line of encouragement. A fortiori, no lady would or could give more encouragement than she meant. What are we to say then of our flirts if this maxim is true? Are there really 'no gentlemen' and 'no ladies,' according to the famous formula of the kitchen? Perhaps it would be said so if gentlehood meant now, as it meant centuries ago, the real worth and virtue of humanity. For flirting with intent is a cruel, a false and a heartless amusement; and time was when cruelty and falsehood were essentially sins that vitiated all claims to gentlehood.

A PRACTICAL PHILANTHROPIST, who picks drunkards out of the mire, gets them washed and clothed, and restored to their right minds, once visited a poor widow on a cold winter day. A clergyman was trying to console her. 'Have faith in Christ,' said the holy man, 'He will help you.' Quoth the practical man, 'It is not faith in Christ she lacks; she has as much of that as you or I; it is wood she stands in need of. Her faith will not save her, with the thermometer at zero. Do you think the Saviour will come and tip her up two feet of wood at the door? No such a thing. She has got faith, but wants firewood!' The missionary went his way; there was no more that he could do. The practical man had the wood there in an hour.

FREEDOM AND PEACE TRIUMPHANT.

Ring out the loud triumph on Liberty's shore,
The conquest is finished, the trial is o'er.
From ocean to ocean repeat the glad sound,
That Freedom and Peace with the garlands are crown'd.
Huzza for the heroes of Liberty's host!
Huzza for our battle flag, Liberty's boast.
Chorus—Blow the trumpets, ring the bells,
While the loud artillery tells
Freedom makes her dwelling here!
Cheers for Freedom! Cheer, boys, cheer!
Freedom makes her dwelling here!
Cheers for Freedom! Cheer, boys, cheer!

The rights of mankind are conceded at last;
Blot out the old record of slavery past,
And let the grand triumph resound from afar,
Our flag is unbroken, it lacks not a star!
Ring out the loud chorus at Liberty's call,
That Justice unfettered is faithful to all!
Chorus—Blow the trumpets, etc.

From lake and from river, from mountain and plain,
The voice of a nation shall swell the refrain,
That Freedom has triumph'd and Justice is crown'd,
While Echo shall tell it to earth's farthest bound
Huzza for the men who for Liberty stood,
And purchased the prize with their patriot blood.
Chorus—Blow the trumpets, etc.

Weymouth, July, 1869.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

On the ancient soil of Egypt, the annals of which date from the origin of the world, and which has been trodden by the feet of so many different nations, among the ruins of ancient civilization by centuries and the simoom, M. de Lesseps found the vestiges of the primitive canal which was mentioned in the time of Herodotus. Commenced more than 600 years before the Christian era, by Pharaoh Nechos, that gigantic undertaking had to be abandoned for the want of labor, for in a few years more than 100,000 workmen had perished on the work. One hundred years later it was recommenced by the Persians, who had conquered Egypt, and one of the Darius affixed his name to the glorious achievement. Falling in ruins, under the princes who succeeded to the throne, the canal was restored under the Ptolemy; but after the expulsion of the Greek dynasty it once more partially fell to ruin, until it was successively re-established by the Emperor Adrian, and several centuries later by Amrou, the lieutenant of the Caliph Omar, who took Egypt between the years 638 and 640. Under the Musulman rule—a period of wars and upsettings—civilization experienced a general eclipse; the canal was neglected, forgotten, left exposed to the fury of water spouts and the invasion of the sands. Latterly it was difficult to discover any traces of it in the moving plains of gravel and dust. These traces however, though indistinct, have been sufficient to fortify the convinced and persevering explorer in the plan that he had formed. Along those indications he drove his stakes, he commenced to work, and after nearly ten years of struggling, unceasing efforts, of incessant labor, he at last approaches the end of his task, the most difficult part of which is finished, and the entire completion of which only requires a few months of less rough and costly work.

The total length of the canal is to be 100 English miles. A brief review of the work that had to be accomplished in order to attain the point now reached, can alone, to a certain degree, indicate the grandeur of the undertaking, the difficulties that it has had to conquer and the activity and skill with which it has been conducted.

First of all a port of entrance and shelter had to be constructed near to Pelouse, on a sandy and shallow coast, which was effected by an artificial mole and a continuous enormous system of dredging. The jetty, against which the waves of the Mediterranean now dash, is formed of blocks of stone, weighing fifteen tons each and dressed on the spot. On that beach, a desert but a few years since, now stands a town, numbering not less than 12,000 inhabitants. The canal opens into the harbor through a cutting in the layers of sand and mud, through which it proceeds for a considerable distance until it reaches the Lake of Menzaleh, which probably was formerly a gulf of the Mediterranean, afterwards closed by the accumulated deposits from the mouth of the Nile. The shifting bottom and oft-agitated surface of this lake, about ten leagues in length, presented fearful obstacles to the engineers. From Kantara, northward, to Port Said, it was necessary to protect the canal, as it proceeded, by long and deep lateral ditches, and by keeping a number of steam dredgers continually at work. From Kantara to El Fendane the work consisted in the removal of clay and sand, with which a rampart was erected on the west bank, in order to guard against the sand winds coming from the desert. Then at El Gizr it was necessary to cut through rocks and mountains of sand for upwards of two miles, and in many places the cuttings were 150 feet deep. At the commencement 20,000 men were engaged on these works, the subsequent maintenance of which only required from 200 to 300. From El Gizr the canal enters the Lake of Timsah, on the shores of which now stands the pretty town of Ismatia, surrounded by gardens and budding vines—thanks to the canal of sweet water—which, after the plans of M. de Lesseps, unites it with the Nile and follows the marine canal to Port Said. Then came the Bitter Lakes, whose muddy waters presented as many obstacles and difficulties to the engineers as they had met with at the Lake of Menzaleh. Fortune, however, favored them, the dredgers removed the mud and the sluices let in the flow from the Mediterranean up to Serapeum, and from the Bitter Lakes to Chalouf, separated from Suez only by a distance of sixteen miles, at the most consisting of a soil more easily handled, more uniform, and comparatively easier to pierce and to remove. From that moment the cutting may be said to have been completed. Before the end of 1869 Africa will cease to be a continent, it will be an island, isolated from the other regions of which our hemisphere is composed. It will be separated from countries placed at great distances from us, which, though shaking off the daily progress of civilization, will be brought nearer in such proportions as will hereafter insure them continued intercourse with other nations, the benefits of an active commercial exchange and the advantages of a fruitful and manifold industry. The route of the Suez Canal will shorten the distance to the far East by 4,300 leagues for Constantinople, 3,300 for Marseilles.

THE OLDEST ROSE TREE IN THE WORLD.

While very old oaks, yews and chestnuts have each their memories embalmed in the pages of history, there is an humble member of the vegetable kingdom which has not found a place in English botanical records. We allude to an exceedingly ancient rose tree at Hildesheim, in Hanover, which is still flourishing with all the vigor of youth. This remarkable tree (or rather climber, for it is supported against the walls of the church) was in existence when Christianity itself was little more than a thousand years old, and if we may believe tradition, had even been blooming for well nigh three hundred summers. But we will give its history in the words of the well known botanist, Herr Lennis, himself a resident of Hildesheim:—

'The oldest known rose tree in the world is one at present growing against the wall of the cathedral of this town (Hildsheim), remarkable alike for its extreme age and the scanty nourishment with which it has supported itself for so many centuries. It varies but slightly from the common dog rose. The leaves are rather more ovate, the pedicles and lower leaf surface more hairy, the fruit smaller and more globular. The stem is two inches thick at its junction with the root, and the whole plant covers some twenty-four square feet of the wall. Bishop Hezilo, who flourished in 1054, 1079, took especial interest in this rose, as being a remarkable monument of the past; and when the cathedral was rebuilt, after being burned down in 1061, he had it once more trained against the portion of the wall, which had been spared by the fire. Tradition states that, in the year of grace 814, the Emperor Ludwig the Pius, son of Charlemagne, was staying at his court at Elze. Being desirous of hunting in the huge forest where now stands Hildesheim, mass was said by the imperial chaplain at the place of rendezvous. By some mishap, when the service was concluded and the party dispersed, the vessel containing the sacred elements was left behind. On returning to the spot the following day great was the surprise of the chaplain to find the holy vessel overshadowed by the tender branchlets of a lovely rose, which had sprung up in the night, and now filled the air with the perfume of its flowers. The Emperor shortly after arrived, and by his command a chapel was built, with the altar standing on the spot occupied by the roots of the rose—that very rose which is now blooming as freshly as though a single decade, and not a thousand years, had passed over its head.'

So far tradition. Certain it is that the roots of the existing rose-tree are buried under the altar of the cathedral, and consequently are inside the building, the stem being carried through the wall to the outer air by a perforation made expressly for it. The plant is held in the highest veneration by the inhabitants, and no one is permitted to gather the flowers or break the branches.

A DARKY'S FAITH IN MIRACLES.—In Zanesville Ohio, there are many colored persons who live by barbering and other light work. They are for the most part an orderly and quiet people, many of them religious, having a church of their own, and an ebony minister, of all of which they are justly proud. One cold evening in the time of a great revival in the church, this ebony expounder was delivering a powerful appeal on faith, the groans and sobs of his hearers giving token of its effect upon their irrepressible natures. The tears stood upon his dark cheeks, his voice quivered like distant thunder, while he emphasized his words by vigorous blows upon the table. In the midst of all this, the stove agitated by his jarring blows, rolled over on the floor. Brother Lewis, the high man of the church, stood irresolute, when the voice of his minister came to him laden with faith: 'Pick up de stobe, brudder Lewis—pick up de stobe; de Lord won't let it burn you!' Brother Lewis' mind was filled up with miracles of faith he had heard that evening, so he yielded to the appeal of his preacher, grabbed the hot stove but dropped it instantly, and turning his reproachful eyes to the disciples of faith, replied: 'De misrey he won't.'

THE DEATH OF A REMARKABLE INVENTOR.—Joseph Dixon, who died in Jersey City recently, aged seventy-one, was a most remarkable, not to say extraordinary man. He made a machine to cut files before he attained his majority, learned the printer's trade, and afterwards that of wood engraving, then lithography, and afterwards studied medicine, and in that connection became interested in chemistry, becoming finally one of the most accomplished and comprehensive chemists in the country. He was a thorough optician and had no equal in his knowledge of photography. He took up the experiments of Daguerre in 1839, and was probably the first person to take a portrait by the camera. He showed Professor Morse how to take portraits by means of a reflector, so that the subjects should not appear reversed. Morse tried to get the plan patented in Europe. Mr. Dixon built the first locomotive with wooden wheels, but with the same double crank now used. He originated the process of photo-lithography, and published it years before it was believed to be useful. By his process of transferring, the old bank notes were easily counterfeited, and it was to guard against the abuse of his own process that he brought out the system of printing in colors on the bills, and had the method patented, but never received any benefit from the patent, all the banks having used it without pay. He perfected the system of making collodion for the photographers and assisted Mr. Harrison in getting a true system for grinding the lenses for camera tubes. He originated the anti-friction metal, that has been for a great many years known as 'Babbit metal,' and he is the father of the steel melting business in this country.

Mr. Dixon was for many years a resident of Salem and in the employ of Col. Francis Peabody, at his lead works in that city, and while there, and afterwards, made such inventions and improvements connected with the business as added greatly to its value.

PUBLIC BENEFACTORS.

The present day is fruitful in large hearted benefactions of men who in the various departments of life have been the architects of their own fortunes—who in a long career of business integrity have verified the truth of the apostrophe to wisdom, "Length of days is in her right hand and in her left hand riches and honor." The munificent charities of George Peabody—charities which are enumerated by millions of money and an aggregate of good which cannot be estimated—have no doubt been largely instrumental in incentive to other prosperous merchants and tradesmen, and the world is destined to be the gainer in corresponding advancement of happiness. That men of large means should be their own executors in munificent bequests for the welfare of their fellows, is a wise conclusion, and the inception of plans based upon this conclusion is working out a result which must favorably effect the moral and intellectual status of the people.

Acting upon the same conclusion, and remembering the injunction "The poor ye have with you always," Alexander T. Stewart, of New York, has inaugurated a stupendous benefaction to the workingmen of that city and vicinity, in the purchase of the Hempstead Plains on Long Island, on which he proposes to improve the lands by subdivisions and the erection of tenements, which will be sold on liberal and very easy terms of payment to the industrious and deserving citizens and laborers. That such a benefaction will have a direct and ample bearing upon the morals of that community is not to be questioned, and its inception betokens a far-seeing and comprehensive purpose for the "greatest good of the greatest number" which will place the name of Stewart in the front rank of benefactors of the human race. That the work commenced by Mr. Stewart has become a public necessity in the overcrowded condition of the poer of New York city, is evident from the statements published in the principal daily, the New York Herald, which has done the people much service in exposing the terrible wrongs inflicted upon tenants by tenement house landlords. A late number of that paper, refering to one of these "rookeries" says, "On the east side of Sixth avenue, between Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth strees, there are at present two enormous brick structures, with a frontage of some sixty feet and a depth of about fifty feet. The ground floor is divided into three stores—a grocery, a plumbing shop and (of course) a liquor store, with a doorway between each store, which affords access to either tenement. These stores are the worst of their class. The cellars are in a horrible condition, with the accumulated filth and mould and rubbish of years, rotting unheeded within them, and sending a never failing supply of poisonous effluvia to permeate the regions above them. Indeed it requires no common degree of courage (not to speak of a pretty strong stomach) for one who is unaccustomed to it not to turn away at once after he has been saluted with a burst of its aroma upon opening one of the doors. The stairs are as week and decrepit as old age and constant wear and tear can make them. They have been so worn away into rotten and splintery hollows that there seems to be but the thickness of a sheet of paper between the foot which ascends them and its sudden disappearance into the mysterious depths below.

The first floor of each house is occupied by four families, each living in two rooms and paying therefor fourteen dollars per month. The same state of things holds good to the top of the house, with this difference, that as you ascend a flight of stairs the rent of a "suit of rooms" becomes one dollar per month cheaper; the lowest sum paid for any two rooms in either house being ten dollars. The general appearance of the house is bad, the ceilings being low, the plaster old and in many places very scaly and quite sooty and black. The number of tenants averages four to each set of apartments (a man, his wife and two children), although it is a positive fact that there have been as many as seven or eight living in two rooms at one and the same time.

Counting four persons to an apartment, there are now living under one roof eighty souls, or in both houses 160, young and old, and this without reckoning those who throng the stores. With all these people huddled together in such a confined space, the interior, as may be imagined, is none of the cleanest, and it swarms even to the top floors with huge and hideous rats, bred in the filth and noisomeness of the cellars below and of a stable for thirty-five horses which adjoins the buildings in the rear, and which contributes no small share of fragrance to the delicacy of the surrounding atmosphere. Moreover, and it is no insignificent item of discomfort, no water reaches either of the two top floors, and none of the sinks throughout the building are provided with "traps," so that the rotten vapor of any substance which may find its way into the waste pipes has unrestricted egress up through the holes which cover their openings. These things are bad enough in humanity's name, but they are only the ingredients of slow and unwholesome disease, which hundreds of other places in this city share in common with these buildings. The hallways of the houses are very narrow and not by any means sufficient to afford egress to the street to a large number of peeple in case of fire, even supposing that 160 inmates could possibly be awakened and have to run down from the sixth story. Should a fire start from below, which is most likely, then their fate would be certainly an inevitable one, for, unless they were provided with wings or partook of the nature of salamanders, there would be no more hope for them on this earth."

We might, in this connection, refer to matters concerning our local interests and put the question to our wealthy citizens, whether our town would not be benefited by similar benefactory enterprises. Already many who are employed in our factories are deprived of the privilege of living near their employment on account of the impossibility of procuring dwellings, and consequently resort to neighboring towns for an abode. The growth of the town in population is thus retarded, while such a state of things continues and a positive injury is done to our local interests.

The Boston School Committee on Tuesday, refused by a vote of 14 to 30 to confirm a married woman as teacher in the Highland District.

WEYMOUTH.

Town Meeting.—The Selectmen's warrant for a meeting of the voters of Weymouth is published in another column. It will be noticed that various matters connected with the schools and school-houses are to be considered, included in which are repairs and painting of buildings and fences, furnishing seats and digging wells. Two new school houses are needed in the 4th and 9th Districts, and now that the District system is abolished, it is proposed to designate the different schools by proper titles, among which the following have been suggested:—For the schools at North Weymouth, "Pilgrim" and "Smith;" at the Landing, "Tufts" and Fifield;" at South Weymouth, "Wessagussett" and Tyler: at East Weymouth, "Boutwell," "Grant" and "Jackson;" the different departments to be designated by divisions.

Pond street is being widened on the west side of the railroad, at South Weymouth. Stones, trees and shrubs abound in great abundance and the work does not progress rapidly. From present indications it is expected the work will be completed next summer. The street needs widening very much, and this improvement will add to its appearance as well as to the convenience of travellers.

Work on the Iron Foundry at East Weymouth has been commenced in earnest. Workmen have been busy sometime in clearing away the ruins of the late fire, and are nearly ready to commence on the foundations. Plans for the two new shops were finished last week, and submitted to the chief manager for approval. The design is to put up two good sized shops, to be built of wood and covered with iron roofs. The forty-foot water wheel is to be superseded by two of Leffel's Double Turbine wheels. It is not expected that the work will be completed before mid-winter.

Mr. Increase Robinson, Superintendent of the East Weymouth Iron Works, died in Boston, Saturday morning, at the advanced age of 79. He has been Superintendent of the works ever since they were built—over 30 years, and was also connected with the Bridgewater works.

The number of children in Weymouth between the ages of five and fifteen, is 1894.

The High School at North Weymouth closed on Friday of last week. The exercises consisted of declamations, reading of compositions and selections from standard authors. One of the declamations was original. Some of the compositions exhibited a depth of thought which promises much for their authors. The singing was fine, but the extreme heat prevented a full attendance of parents and friends. The house was tastefully decorated with evergreens, wreaths of flowers and boquets.

All the schools in town have been closed until Monday, Aug 30.

Trial Justice Court.—Before E. C. Bumpus, T. J. Commonwealth vs. A. Tracy, of Weymouth. Defendant was charged with assault and battery upon Edw. Dowd. Found guilty and fined $5 and costs.

Edward O'Brien, of East Weymouth, charged with assault upon Joanna Leonard, was found guilty and fined $10 and costs.

David Lyons, of Cohasset, for unlawfully keeping intoxicating liquors, with intent to sell the same in this commonwealth, was fined $10 and costs.

Joseph Longbottom, of Braintree, for same offence, was fined $10 and costs.

Several search warrants have been issued by this magistrate during the past week, with more or less success in the ferreting out of small quantities of poor liquors.

The statements in the Weymouth Gazette of last week relative to the Universalist Church and myself are all incorrect. $1200 per year is not my salary at Bridgeport. I have no right to leave the society here without giving three months notice, and have no idea of supplying the desk after the three months shall have expired.

Olympia Brown.

A Card.—The undersigned desires to return his acknowledgements to those who contributed to the complete success of his Complementary Concert on the 13th inst.—to the Masonic Choir of Boston and individually to Messrs Barnabee, Whitney, Fitz and Dow, whose performances individually and collectively gave eclat and brilliancy to the occasion—To the Weymouth Band, whose aid was excellent as it was timely and unexpected and indeed indespensable—To the members of the Choral Society, whether as soloists, choralists, or orchestra, who excelled all previous efforts—To the ladies and gentlemen whose efforts before and at the Concert contributed to the financial success of the occasion—To each and all he would return his most sincere and heartfelt thanks and trusts he may be able to reciprocate on some future occasion. Charles H. Webb.

Weymouth, July 21st, 1860.

Singular Circumstance.—Tuesday evening last, Mr. William Vance, of East Weymouth, went out to his barn, and in the darkness stumbled over an obstruction which on further examination proved to be a pine coffin, with pickaxe and shovel. The matter remains a mystery to Mr. Vance and the residents of the vicinity, and the only conclusion to be arrived at is that some resurrectionist had secreted the articles in the barn in the evening, preparatory to rifling some grave in the Cemetery.

Co-Operative Building.—The East Weymouth Laborers' Co-operative Association have instructed a Committee of the Association to procure a building for a co-operative store, and the committee have decided to erect a building for that purpose upon the lot lately purchased by that association, corner of Broad street and Drury Lane, near Dizer's manufactory. The building will be 22 by 30 feet, two stories high, and will serve the temporary purpose of the society until they are prepared to erect a larger structure.

The Universalist Sunday School, of South Weymouth, went to the beach Tuesday. The weather was fine and everything passed pleasantly. A number of friends joined them in the excursion, so that the beach party numbered about 325.

St. Crispin, the shoemakers' patron saint, is by no means a purely mythological character. He lived in the latter half of the third century, was of a Roman patrician family, and on account of persecution for his conversion to Christianity, fled to Gaul, where he made shoes and preached the gospel, with great success, until he was martyred by Maximillian,—not, however, untill he had nominally converted nearly the whole of France.

BRAINTREE.

R. S. Storrs, D. D., of Brooklyn, preached at North Braintree last Sunday. There was a large attendance from this and adjacent towns.

Meetings are to be held in the Baptist Church at South Braintree, as usual. Non-professors generally unite with the church in the determination to sustain meetings, and attend the Sabbath services in larger numbers than ever.

The 2d Congregational Church at South Braintree, has extended a call to Rev. Mr. Allen to become their pastor and he has accepted the call. Mr. A. belongs to the senior class at Andover and graduates some time this month.

A horse belonging to H. M. White, of South Braintree was left standing in front of the post office in that village last Saturday afternoon, when the animal suddenly took fright and started toward the depot at a furious rate. Barnard Mc Gliney, an Irish boy about seven years old, happened to be in the street at the time, and despite all his efforts to get out of the way was run over and had his skull fractured. Dr. Babbit, of Randolph, was called and dressed the wounds of the little sufferer, who is now doing well. The horse did not stop untill in the vicinity of the shovel works. The wagon to which he was attached was somewhat damaged.

Twenty new tenant houses are needed in South Braintree at once.

EAST BRAINTREE.

In last week's issue we noticed a paragraph calling attention to the amount of salary paid to the Post Master at Weymouth. We have no desire to raise a discussion as to the truth of the statement of facts contained in that paragraph. However this may be, it undoubtedly gives legitimate occasion for the urging of the claims of this part of the town to a Post Office. The want of such accommodation is manifest, and sensibly felt by every one. It is useless to set forth the claims we have to the attention of the Post Office department here to induce the accomplishment of so desirable an object, as these claims have been carefully brought to their attention years ago. The town has increased considerably since then, and there is every prospect of its further increase, and therefore making this provision for the people's comfort and convenience, the more desirable and imperative. Universally considered, that which is just, or that which is most beneficial in general society, bears the true character of justice, and is the same to all. A consideration of this matter should be as remote as possible from political influences, and free from any but judicial behests, and with the most personal integrity and an extreme vigilance against any indirect seducing influence and a thorough disregard of the ill-will of those who profit by the present arrangement. W. M.

A new discovery has recently been made in lubricating oil for sewing machines and small machinery. It has been found that by a proper union of several kinds of oil, a compound can be made which does not gum up or stain, and will not injure the machinery on which it is used. It is highly recommended by those who have used it, and is specially designed for sewing machines. It costs only $1.25 per gallon, and can be obtained of J. P. Chamberlin, 11 John St., Boston.

Suicide in South Scituate.—Mr. Jesse Turner, 53 years of age, committed suicide on Wednesday of last week, by cutting his throat with a razor. He had been in depressed spirits for some time past, and expressed fears that he might be led to make way with himself. He left home about two o'clock in the afternoon, and not returning, a search was made for him, and he was found in the woods, nearly dead, with the razor in his hands. He went a few steps after he committed the deed, and evidently tried to stop the flow of blood He was an unmarried man, possessed of considerable property, and lived with an aged aunt.

EAST ABINGTON.

Profitable Farming.—Mr. Leonard Blanchard, of East Abington, has raised $290 worth of green peas on about one acre of ground this season. The same ground will now be sowed with ruta bagas, and if the crop does well Mr. B. expects its value will be equal to that of the peas.

A Unitarian preacher has been holding forth in Underwood Hall, East Abington, the past two Sabbaths. Friends of the cause are talking of organizing a church of that faith and order at East Abington.

A nymph du pave's nest has been discovered in East Abington, in a very flourishing condition. Constable Baker arrested one of the parties on Friday night of last week, and the nest will be broken up.

Base Ball.—At the game of ball played between the King Philips and the Stars, of Randolph, on the grounds of the former, on Saturday last, the score was 39 for the King Philips to 16 for the Stars.

Hanover.—In the article published in our paper a few weeks since relating to the retirement of Rev. Mr. Freeman from his pastoral charge of the First Church in Hanover, a statement was appended relative to the resignation of Rev. Mr. Aiken, which was so worded as to convey the impression that the latter gentleman was leaving for the same reasons. The appended item read "Mr. Aiken has been dismissed in a similar manner; for what cause we are unable to say." We learn from the writer of the article that in this somewhat blind allusion he intended to convey the idea that Mr. Aiken had been dismissed by the Parish, but did not suppose it would be understood that it was for similar reasons. As a matter of justice to Mr. Aiken, we would state the facts in the case, which are, that he was induced to ask for a release from his connection with the parish on account of the percuniary embarrassments under which they are laboring, and by reason of the unsettled state of his family. As a refutation of the idea that may have been derived from the wording of the allusion to Mr. A., the affidavit of the clerk of the parish certifies that but three members have joined the parish since its organization—two in 1864 and one in 1866.

Hanover.—The valuation of real estate in the town of Hanover is as follows: Real Estate, $436,712; Personal Property, $395,543; Total, $832,255.

North Bridgewater post office has been made a money order office.

John F. Beal is building a New Universalist church in the same town.

The increase in the valuation of North Bridgewater is $118,445.

Duxbury.—The arrangements for celebrating the arrival of the cable at Duxbury are rapidly approaching completion. To contain the shore end a trench has been dug from the old bank building to the beach, a distance of nearly two miles, which will be filled immediately on the arrival of the Chiltern, an event expected to transpire about the first of next week. The celebration will be as extensive as resources will permit. Liberal contributations have been made by many prominent citizens, and one of Yale's mammoth tents has been procured, and put up on an eminence commanding a view of the Hummock and the ocean as well as of Plymouth and Clarke's Island. The latter place is well known as the scene of the first debarkation of the Pilgrims, an exploring party from the Mayflower remaining there part of a day and night before the general landing at Plymouth. The tent is capable of accommodating some six hundred of the invited guests, for whom a banquet will be given at the town hall. In addition to the public celebration, an entertainment is meditated by Geo. W. Wright, Esq., whose magnificent residence a short distance from the bank building has been appropriately fitted up. He has engaged the Germania Band, and means to spare no expense in making this a unique affair. Large numbers of distinguished guests will be present, and the evening is to be enlivened by a social levee, for which active preparations are now being made.

Much enthusiasm is manifested on the part of the residents of Duxbury, to whom the landing of the cable will be an event long to be remembered.

At a safe estimate, the number of visitors will exceed ten thousand, while it is not improbable that full twenty thousand may be present. Those who come, however, had best come prepared, as the resources of the town can hardly meet the demand. Special trains will be run on the Old Colony & Newport Railroad for the accommodation of visitors.

Quincy.—The meeting held last week to see if the town would accept the donation of the late Ebenezer Woodward, was very slimly attended—less than fifty were present. One speaker thought the bequest would be of no benefit to the town. He said it was like giving him $50,000 in one of our Western territories with restrictions not to use it until he arrived in the States. The restriction would be apt to cost him his life and the fifty thousand with it. This donation he thought was a good deal similar. It would cost the town more than they would receive.

After remarks by several persons a vote was passed, that a Committee of three persons be chosen to consider the subject, and report at an adjournment.

The boot manufactory of Messrs. John D. & T. A. Whicher, on School street, was entered by a window on Tuesday night, and eight cases of boots, worth $350, were carried out.

The Norfolk County Unitarian Sunday School Association held its fourteenth annual meeting in the Rev. Mr. Folsom's church in Dedham, on Wednesday, the 30th ultimo.

The opening address was by Rev. G. L. Chaney, on 'The Plan of a Sunday School,' and was a very interesting and suggestive discourse.

This was followed by the annual report of the Secretary, Rev. Adams Ayer, by which it appears that there are belonging to the Association 21 schools, numbering 3000 teachers and 1800 scholars, and whose libraries contain about 12,500 volumes.

Wood's Household Magazine.—Two years ago Newburg gave birth to her sixth publication by S. S. Wood. It was first issued as a prospectus of a general book agency business, and has since been twice re-christened—first to Wood's Household advocate," then to "Wood's Household Magazine," its present title. The first number was in a small eight page form, at ten cents a year. It has since been enlarged four times, with subscription prices twenty-five cents, fifty cents, seventy five cents, and one dollar. We learn that the back numbers are all soon to be re-published in the present Magazine form. The success of Mr. Wood's enterprise is one of the marvels of periodical literature in these United States. From comparatively nothing it has grown to be one of the most extensive and important concerns of the kind in the country. The circulation of the Household Magazine is we believe exceeded but by one monthly in the country—Harper's

The total cost, of the Legislature, this year, was over a quarter of a million.

A Japanese Dinner.—1. Bitter Green Tea (whipped). 2. Sweetmeats. (Band arrives, and tobacco is brought on to fill up time between the courses.) 3. Fish, Soup, and Raw Fish, with hot Saki (a spirit, not unlike whiskey, extracted from rice.) 4. Soup of Mushroom, Green Vegetable, and Fish. (Exit Band to the great relief of guests.) 5. Dish of Prawns and Sea-weed. 6. Soup of Seaweed, Vegetables, ect. 7. Hard-boiled Eggs and Sliced Pears. 8. Soup of Lobster and Mushrooms, with very diminutive Lobsters. 9. Cold Fried Lampreys. 10. Soup of Loochoo Pork Fat, and various vegetables. 11. Fish, with Salted Plums and Vegetables. 12. Soup of Wild-boar and Young Bamboo. 13. Cold Fowl and Pickled Shoots of Bamboo. 14. Soup of Fish and Seaweed. 15. Cake of Fish, Eggs, and rice, with Green Beans and Fungus. 16. Soup of White Berries, and Sprats. 17. Small Fried Trout. 18. Soup with Acorns, ect. 19 Raw Cuttle-fish. 20. Soup of Fowl and Fruit. 21. Green Ginger, Fish in Batter, Cucumber, and Bamboo. 22. Beche du Mer in Batter. 23. Small Bones of Chicken, and Unlaid Eggs. 24 Soup of Fish and Roe, with Ginger Leaves. 25. Soup of Cockles (with their shells.) 26. Raw Benita, Rice, Apple and Chili Leaves. 27. Soup of Vermicelli, "Soy" and Red Berries. 28. Sweetmeats. 29. Sea-weed Jelly, Preserved Beans, Bonbons. 30. A Tray with Rice, Thick Soup and Pickles. 31. Another Tray containing "Daimio Fish" and various Soupcons.—32. A third Tray with Fish "Conglomerate; followed by Saki." 33. Hot Water in the Rice Bowl (as an appetizer) 34. Gelatine Sweetmeats (like stewed India rubber,) a Chestnut, and Pickled Tripe. 32. Bitter Green Tea. 36. Large dish of Elaborate Sweetmeats. 37. Bitter Green Tea again. 38. Imitation peaches made of Sugar and Sweet Jelly. 39. Red Berry Sirup, Slices of Turnip, Salt, ect. 40. Dried Fish (very small,) with thick Soup and hot, strong Saki.—

[Harper's Magazine for August.

That excellent Young Men's Magazine, for August,—Packard's Monthly, has been received.

The swindlers of New York who have run the gift enterprise business into the ground are seeking for fresh fields and pastures new; and in their unblushing assnrance have the temerity to send circulars to residents in the country, offering bogus money for sale, one of which circulars read as follows:

No. 69 Wall Stree, New York.

My Dear Sir—We have a large stock of exact copies of the genuine United States Treasury notes on hand, executed by the most skilled men in the art outside of the State Prison, which we desire to immediately dispose of on the following very liberal terms, viz.:—

Packages representing $200, in various denominations, $15. Packages representing 1,000, in various denominations, $50. Packages representing 2,000 in various denominations, $80, and so on for every package thereafter. If you order a fifty dollar package we will sell to no one else in your vicinity or town, thereby giving you the exclusive right to circulate or appoint agents to do so in a town. For a county right you must order an eighty dollar package. In order to induce you to assist us in circulating these notes we propose to send you any package on receipt of one-third the price we charge above, you paying us the balance (two-thirds) as soon after you have received the package as possible. We trust only partly to your honesty to do this, at the same time thinking that, as you will consider it to your interest to deal with us further, you will comply with our request. If you are afraid to send money to us by mail we will send the package to you by express, C. O. D., collect on delivery one-third of the price we charge for a package, you sending us the balance (two-thirds) as soon after same is received as possible. However, it is preferable to have the money sent by mail, as it saves express charges, and is sure to come safe if you have the letter registered; or send Post Office order. You may send money in this way to any amount at our risk, as we prefer it to all other ways; your orders receive more attention and you get your goods quicker. Should you desire to avail yourself of this opportunity you must do so at once, and address in confidence,

It is often remarked by strangers visiting our State, that we show a larger proportion of good horses, than any other State in the Union. This, we tell them, is owing to two principal reasons: in the first place, we breed from the very best stock; and in the second place, our people use Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders which in our judgment, are of incalculable advantage.

In the report of the concert last week mention should have been made of the fine singing of Miss S. Loud and Mrs. Tirrell, which added much to the entertainment. It was by no means our intention to "leave them out in the cold."

THE DANVERS BOY AT HOME AGAIN.

Again his friendly voice we hear,
Again his manly form we see,
To ev'ry christian spirit dear—
Th' almoner of Deity.
From either side the Atlantic wave,
Uncounted thousands swell the strain
Of gratitude to him who gave
His princely wealth for others gain.
The sick and poor, the old and young,
Invoke a blessing on their friend.
From ev'ry heart and ev'ry tongue,
Their fervent thanks to heaven ascend.
The Monarch from her lofty seat,
Prays for a blessing on his head;
And floats an incense still more sweet,
From the poor toiler's lowly shed.
God bless thee, gen'rous, good old man;
His choicest, priceless gifts be thine.
Of charities thou lead'st the van,
Where noblest actions brightest shine.

Probate Court.

To the next of kin, Creditors, and all other persons interested in the estate of MARY E. BURRELL, late of Weymouth, in said County, widow, deceased, intestate:

Whereas, application has been made to said Court to grant a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased, to JAMES HUMPHREY, of Weymouth, in the County of Norfolk, you are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Dorchester, in said county of Norfolk, on the first day of September next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against granting the same.—And said James Humphrey is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this Citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Weymouth Weekly Gazette, printed at Weymouth, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, George White, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-first day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine. [12 14] J. H. COBB, Register.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup.

Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills will cure Consumption, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, if taken according to directions. They are all three to be taken at the same time. They cleanse the stomach, relax the liver and put it to work; then the appetite becomes good; the food digests and makes good blood; the patient begins to grow in flesh; the diseased matter ripens in the lungs, and the patient outgrows the disease and gets well This is the only way to cure consumption.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary Consumption. The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs, nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, and the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To do this, the Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver, so that the Pulmonic Syrup and the food will make good blood.

Schenck's Mandrake Pills act upon the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the ducts of the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved; the stools will show what the Pills can do; nothing has ever been invented except calomel (a deadly poison which is very dangerous to use unless with great care,) that will unlock the gall bladder and start the secretions of the liver like Schenck's Mandrake Pills.

Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative, and the alkali in the Seaweed, which this preparation is made of, assists the stomach to throw out the gastric juice to dissolve the food with the Pulmonic Syrup, and it is made into good blood without fermentation or souring in the stomach.

The great reason why physicians do not cure Consumption is, they try to do too much; they give medicines to stop the cough, to stop chills, to stop night sweats, hectic fever, and by so doing they derange the whole digestive powers, locking up the secretions, and eventually the patient sinks and dies.

Dr. Schenck, in his treatment, does not try to stop a cough, night sweats, chills or fever. Remove the cause, and they will all stop of their own accord. No one can be cured of Consumption, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Canker, Ulcerated Throat, unless the liver and stomach are made healthy.

When there is no lung disease and only Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are sufficient, without the Pulmonic Syrup. Take the Mandrake Pills freely in all billious complaints, as they are perfectly harmless.

If a person has consumption, of course the lungs in some way are diseased, either tubercles, abscesses, bronchial irritation, pleura adhesion, or the lungs are a mass of inflammation and fast decaying. In such cases what must be done? It is not only the lungs that are wasting, but it is the whole body. The stomach and liver have lost their power to make blood out of food. Now the only chance is to take Dr. Schenck's three medicines, which will bring up a tone to the stomach, the patient will begin to want food, it will digest easily and make good blood; then the patient begins to gain in flesh, and as soon as the body begins to grow, the lungs commence to heal up, and the patient gets fleshy and well. This is the only way to cure Consumption.

Dr. Schenck, who has enjoyed uninterrupted health for many years past, and now weighs 225 pounds, was wasted away to a mere skeleton in the very last stage of Pulmonary Consumption, his physicians having pronouncing his case hopeless and abandoned him to his fate. He was cured by the aforesaid medicines, and since his recovery many thousands similarly afflicted have used Dr. Schenck's preparations with the same remarkable success. Full directions accompany each, making it not absolutely necessary to personally see Dr. Schenck, unless patients wish their lungs examined, and for this purpose he is professionally at his Principal Office, Philadelphia, every Saturday, where all letters for advice must be addressed. He is also professionally at No. 32 Bond Street, New York, every other Tuesday, and at No. 35 Hanover Street, Boston, every other Wednesday. He gives advice free, but for a thorough examination with his Respirometer the price is $5. Office hours at each city from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Price of the Pulmonic Syrup and Seaweed Tonic each $1.50 per bottle, or $7.50 a half dozen. Mandrake Pills 25 cents a box. G. C. GOODWIN & CO., 38 Hanover St., Boston, Wholesale agents. For sale by all druggists.

To either of the Constables of the Town of Weymouth, in the County of Norfolk, Greeting:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts you are directed to notify the inhabitants of the town of Weymouth qualified to vote in elections and town affairs, to meet at the Town Hall in said Weymouth, on Tuesday, the 27th day of July instant, at three o'clock in the afternoon, then and there to act on the following articles:

1. To choose a Moderator to preside in said meeting.
2. By request of the School Committee, "To hear the report of said Committee in relation to the School property and act thereon."
3. "To see if the Town will authorize the School Committee to make such repairs and improvements of the School Houses and School Furniture as in their judgment will be for the interests of the town," or take any other action in relation thereto.
4. "To see if the Town will take measures to build one or more School Houses"
5. "To see if the Town will adopt some name for the Schools in each School House of said Town."
6. To see if the Town will take measures for the better preservation of its Records.
7. To see what action the town will have in relation to an order of notice from the County Commissioners on a petition of Jacob Whitcomb and others, for a new road from a point in Randolph to Randolph Street in Weymouth, and to widen and straighten Randolph Street to Pond Street.
8. To see what action the Town will take in relation to an order of notice from the County Commissioners, on the petition of Elnathan Bates and others, for widening and straightening of Commercial Street between the house of William Wildes and the store of Bicknell & Brother.
9. To take such action as may be necessary in relation to the settlement of the claims of the Town on the Nadell property.
10. By request of Elias S. Beals, to see if the Town will take any action in relation to ascertaining and defining the boundaries of the public roads in said town, and to prevent encroachments on the same.
11. To see if the Town will adopt the following provision of law passed by the Legislature of 1869:—When beasts are taken up and destrained by a field driver, in pursuance of the provisions of Chap. 25 of the General Statutes, he may impound them in any suitable place on his own premises; and for the purposes of said Chapter he shall be considered a pound keeper, and such place on his own premises shall be considered a town pound in relation to beasts therein impounded.

And you are directed to serve this Warrant by posting up attested copies thereof in each of the public meeting-houses and at the Weymouth Post Office in said town, seven days, at least, before the time for holding said meeting.

Hereof fail not, and make due return of this Warrant, with your doings thereon, to the Town Clerk, at the time and place of meeting aforesaid.

By the County Commissioners.
NORFOLK, SS.

At a meeting of said Commissioners held at Dedham, in and for said County, on the sixth day of July, A. D. 1869, by adjournment from the twenty second day of June next preceding, upon a petition of E. S. Beals and six others, praying that certain portions of a highway in the town of Weymouth, from Pilgrim Wharf to Stepping Stone Bridge, should be widened and straightened and other portions discontinued, and as set forth in said petition (notice having first been duly given to all persons and corporations interested), said Commissioners met at the office of E. S. Beals in Weymouth, on the twenty-ninth day of June, A. D. 1869, and viewed the route and premises, and heard all persons and corporations interested, and said case was thence continued and adjourned to the sixth day of July; and said Commissioners now adjudge that the public convenience and necessity require that said petition be granted.

DODD'S NERVINE DID IT.

New London, Conn., April 26, 1869.

Remembered Friend—I thought it well to wait another week before writing, to see if I continued to improve, as I have been doing for some time, under the treatment of the new medicine, and I am happy to tell you that I am getting better—even faster than when you were here. I commenced the use of DODD'S NERVINE without anybody advising me to it. When I began with it I could only walk from my bed to the chair. My trouble has been extreme pain in the head, and has lasted over three years. All the medicine I have taken heretofore taken has failed to give any relief. I am now able to go up and down stairs, and daily improving. I consider the NERVINE the best medicine I ever found, and shall continue its use, for I am confident of entire recovery. I have taken only three bottles, and would not be without it on any account.

Very truly, Mrs. I. S. Nute. 7-15

FOUTZ'S MIXTURE.

The Great External Remedy.

For Man and Beast.

It will Cure Rheumatism.

The reputation of this preparation is so well established, that little need be said in this connection.

ON MAN it has never failed to cure PAINFUL NERVOUS AFFECTIONS, CONTRACTING MUSCLES, STIFFNESS and PAINS IN THE JOINTS, STITCHES in the SIDE or Back, SPRAINS, BRUISES, BURNS, SWELLINGS, CORNS and FROSTED FEET. Persons affected with Rheumatism can be effectually and permanently cured by using this wonderful preparation: it penetrates to the nerve and bone immediately on being applied.

ON HORSES it will cure SCRATCHES, SWEENEY, POLL-EVIL, FISTULA, OLD RUNNING SORES, SADDLE or COLLAR GALLS, SPRAINED JOINTS, STIFFNESS OF THE STIFLES, &c. It will prevent HOLLOW HORN and WEAK BACK IN MILCH COWS.

I have met with great success in bringing my Mixture within the reach of the Public. I am daily in receipt of letters from Physicians, Druggists, Merchants and Farmers, testifying to its curative powers.

To the Honorable Board of Commissioners of Norfolk County:

The undersigned citizens of Randolph and Weymouth, in said County of Norfolk, respectfully represent that the public convenience and necessity requires that a public road and highway should be laid out and constructed, beginning near the residence of the heirs of Elijah Porter, in said Randolph, and leading in an easterly direction over land of said heirs of Elijah Porter and land of Hannah Faxon, of Martin Rogers, of Simeon White, of Thomas Hollis, and others, of Sanford Hollis, of Thomas Nash, of Roswell Corbin, to Randolph Street, in said Weymouth, near the residence of said Roswell Corbin; thence widening and straightening said Randolph Street in said Weymouth, to near the residence of Harrison Carroll, thence laying out and constructing a road and highway over land of said Harrison Carroll, and land of Rachel Rogers out to said Randolph Street, near the westerly side of a Dam to Weymouth Great Pond; thence widening and straightening said Randolph street to Pond Street or the Depot road in South Weymouth.

Your petitioners therefore request you to view the premises and lay out and widen and straighten the same, or such parts thereof, as in your judgement the public convenience and necessity may require.

And as in duty bound will ever pray.

JACOB WHITCOMB, and 209 others.

Randolph, March, 1869.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

NORFOLK, ss. At a meeting of the County Commissioners, begun and held at Dedham, within and for said County of Norfolk, on the fourth Tuesday of June, A. D., 1869

On the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, that the County Commissioners will meet at the South Weymouth Railroad Station of the Old Colony and Newport Railroad Company, in Weymouth, on Tuesday, the seventeenth day of August, A. D. 1869, at ten o'clock A. M., and thence proceed to view the route described in said petition, and hear and act thereon.

And that an attested copy of said petition, with this order thereon, be served upon the Clerks of the Towns of Randolph and Weymouth, thirty days at least before the time appointed for said view, and also that a like copy be published three weeks successively in the East Norfolk Register and the Weymouth Gazette, newspapers printed at Randolph and Weymouth, respectively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before said view, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in Randolph and Weymouth, aforesaid fourteen days at least before said view, that all persons and corporations interested for or against said petition may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.

PIQUANTS.

Why is the marriage of the sexes declining? The Revolution answers this important question, as follows:—Stewart sold twenty shawls this season worth $3,000 each, and one worth $4,000. One woman ran up a bill of $20,000 in a couple of months.

Quadrat suggests hair pins as the only sure preventive of hair falling off.

Interesting to youthful barristers: a maiden brief is not a little girl.

The height of impudence: taking shelter from the rain in an umbrella shop.

There is nothing wonderful in the fact that a man on a 'bender' invariably goes crooked.

Henry Ward Beecher compares the different religious denominations to the different pockets in a suit of clothes and says it is of little consequence whether one goes to heaven in an inside or outside pocket.

Motto for fraudulent bankrupts—'The best way to succeed is to fail.'

The woman question. Is he rich?

A soldier was going off the field too hastily, when the provost guard cried, 'Halt!' 'Can't.' 'Wounded?' 'No.' 'Sick?' 'No.' 'What's the matter?' I'm scared, and want to go to the rear to—rally!'

Young ladies, our fashion gossip says, are to wear 'square bodies.' Will they prevent the beaux from coming around?

Those who go angling now will not go in vain—however inexpert they may be—for if the trout will not bite, they may be certain the mosquitoes will.

There's nothing like advertising. A lady advertised last week for a stray cow, and the cow came home next day, pulled down the cow-pen fence, bellowed until the milk maid came, and then kept off her own calf till she was milked.

The attention of reflecting invalids is invited to the following observations. The questions are such as the sick would be likely to ask: the replies are simple facts clothed in language that everybody can understand is Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient adapted to the cure of Indigestion and its concomitants?

BECAUSE
It tones the membranes of the stomach and promotes the secretion of the gastric juice, the solvent which converts the food into a life-sustaining agent; and also because it relieves the bowels without weakening them, and moderately stimulates the bile-producing organ.

WHY
is it recommended for obstructions in the kidneys and other renal diseases, and for dropsy?

BECAUSE
it combines the properties of a mild diuretic sudorific with those of a local and general invigorant, and by promoting perspiration relieves the blood of a large amount of morbid matter which would otherwise vitiate the secretions.

WHY
is it prescribed for rheumatism, and claimed to be eminently beneficial in all the varieties of that disease?

BECAUSE
rheumatism is caused by the inflamatory action of acid in the blood upon the fibres, membranes and ligaments; and the salines of the Seltzer Aperient being absorbed into the veinous system tend to neutralize the vitiating principle.

WHY

BECAUSE
it opens the pores, reduces the temperature of the body, calms the nerves, and acts as a moderate evacuant, and has a refreshing effect upon the whole system. Of all fever drinks it is the most cooling and delightful.

In this brief summary of the virtues of Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperent, nothing is set forth which is not justified by testimony of competent medical men. 9-12

L. W. COOK

TAKES this opportunity to inform his friends and the public that he still continues in the Photographic Business, at the old established and well known Gallery, where he will be happy to receive and fill all orders for

PHOTOGRAPHS AND TINTYPES.

CARD PICTURES taken with all the late improvements. All kinds of Photographic Likenesses, from the smallest Tintypes to Life Size Portraits, executed in the best style.

Especial attention paid to copying

From Old Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, &c. This branch of the business he makes a Specialty, and would call attention to the fact that he seldom fails to give Perfect Satisfaction, even in Copying from Old Pictures which have been injured by stains or otherwise, and spoiled in themselves.

Many having copies of deceased friends are unwilling to trust them in the hands of a Photographer to copy, for fear they may be lost or injured. The most extreme care will be used by him with such pictures while in his hands. He employs one of the best Artists in Boston, who finishes his pictures in India Ink or Colors equal to any city work, and at less prices.

A good variety of Frames on hand, Gilt, Rosewood, Black Walnut, Rustic, &c.

Please call and see for yourselves.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

HAIR DRESSING,

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use, in every country and among all classes, as this mild but efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cured them; those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that what it does once it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

TENDER MEMORIES.

BY J. ROLLIN M. SQUIRE.

Round me gather tender memories
Of the days that are no more,
Murmuring like the ceaseless ocean
As it pulses on the shore,—
Filling all my days with gladness,
Cadences and matchless lays,
Lighting all the solemn Present
With the glow of other days.

Round me rise the airy castles
Builded in Youth's morn of dreams,
When I talked with bird and blossom
And the naiads of the streams;
Filling all my days with pleasure,
Harmonies and fancies wild,
Tinging all the solemn Present
With the memories of the child.

Round me whisper noiseless voices,
Vanished forms walk at my side,
Bringing back the tender graces
Of the dear, loved ones who died,
Filling all my days with comfort,
Melodies that rise and flow,
Crowding all the solemn Present
With the things of long ago.

TOM THUMB'S COURTSHIP.

BY P. T. BARNUM.

The General met us at the depot in Bridgeport on Saturday morning, and drove us to my house in his own carriage his coachman being tidily dressed, with a broad velvet ribbon and silver buckle placed upon his hat, expressly for the occasion. Lavinia was duly informed that this was the General's 'turnout;' and after resting half an hour at Lindencroft he took her out to ride. He stopped a few moments at his mother's house, where she saw the apartments which his father had built expressly for him, and filled with the most gorgeous furniture—all corresponding to his own diminutive size. Then he took her to East Bridgeport, and undoubtedly took occasion to point out in great detail, all the houses which he owned, for he depended much upon having his wealth make some impression upon her. They returned and the General staid to lunch. I asked Lavinia how she liked her ride; she replied:

'It was very pleasant, but she added, 'it seems as if you and Tom Thumb own about all of Bridgeport!'

The General took his leave and returned about five o'clock to dinner with his mother. Mrs. Stratton remained until seven o'clock. She expressed herself charmed with Lavinia Warren; but not a suspicion passed her mind that little Charlie was endeavoring to give her this accomplished young lady as a daughter-in-law. The General had privately asked me to invite him to stay over night, for, said he, 'I intend to pop the question before the Commodore arrives. So I told his mother I thought the General had better stop with us over night as the Commodore would be up in the late train, adding that it would be more pleasant for the little folks to be together. She assented and the General was happy.

After tea Lavinia and the General sat down to play backgammon. As nine o'clock approached, I remarked that it was about time to retire, but somebody would have to sit up until nearly eleven o'clock, in order to let in the Commodore. The General replied:

'I will sit up with pleasure—if Miss Warren will remain also.'

Lavinia carelessly replied that she was accustomed to late hours, and she would wait and see the Commodore. A little supper was placed upon the table for the Commodore, and the family retired.

Now, it happened that a couple of mischievous young ladies were visiting at my house, one of whom was to sleep with Lavinia. They were suspicious that the General was going to propose to Lavinia that evening, and in a spirit of ungovernable curiosity, they determined, notwithstanding its manifest impropriety, to witness the operation, if they could possibly manage to do so on the sly. Of course this was inexcusable, the more so as so few of my readers, had they been placed under the same temptation, would have been guilty of such an impropriety. Perhaps I should hesitate to use the testimony of such witnessses, or even to trust it. But a few weeks after they told the little couple the whole story, they were forgiven, and all had a hearty laugh over it.

It so happened that the door of the sitting-room, in which the General and Lavinia were left at the backgammon board, opened into the hall just at the side of the stairs, and these young misses, turning out the lights in the hall, seated themselves upon the stairs in the dark, where they had full view of the cosy little couple, and were within easy earshot of all that was said.

The house was still. The General soon acknowledged himself vanquished at backgammon, and gave it up. After sitting a few moments he evidently thought it was best to put a clincher on the financial part of his abilities; so he drew from his pocket a policy of insurance, and handing it to Lavinia, he asked her if she knew what it was.

Examining it she replied: 'It is an insurance policy. I see you keep your property insured.'

'But the beauty of it is, it is not my property,' replied the General, 'and yet I get the benefit of the insurance in case of fire. You will see' he continued, unfolding the policy, 'this is the property of Mr. Williams, but here you will observe it reads, 'loss, if any, payable to Charles S. Stratton, as his interest may appear.' The fact is, I loaned Mr. Williams three thousand dollars, took a mortgage on his house, and made him insure it for my benefit. In this way, you perceive, I get my interest, and he has to pay the taxes.'

'That is a very wise way, I should think,' remarked Lavinia.

'That is the way I do all my business,' replied the General, complacently, as he returned the huge insurance policy to his pocket. 'You see,' he continued, I never lend any of my money, without taking bond and mortgage security, then I have no trouble with taxes; my principal is secure, and I receive my interests regularly.'

The explantion seemed satisfactory to Lavinia, and the General's courage began to rise. Drawing his chair a little nearer to hers, he said:

'So you are going to Europe soon?'

Yes, replied Lavinia, Mr. Barnum intends to take me over in a couple of months.

You will find it very pleasant, remarked the General; I have been there twice; in fact, I have spent six years abroad, and I like the old countries very much.

I hope I shall like the trip, and I expect I shall, responded Lavinia, for Mr. Barnum says I shall visit all the principal cities, and he has no doubt I will be invited to appear before the Queen of England, the Emperor and Empress of France, the King of Prussia, the Emperor of Austria, and at the courts of any other countries which we may visit. Oh! I shall like that, it will be so new to me.

Yes, it will be very interesting, indeed. I have visited most of the crowned heads remarked the General, with an evident feeling of self-congratulation. But are you not afraid you will be lonesome in a strange country? asked the General.

No, I think there will be no danger of that, for friends will accompany me, was the reply.

I wish I was going over, for I know all about the different countries, and could explain them to you, remarked Tom Thumb.

That would be very nice, said Lavinia.

Do you think so? said the General, moving his chair still closer to Lavinia's.

Of course, said Lavinia, coolly, for I being a stranger to all the habits and customs of the people, as well as to the country, it would be pleasant to have some person along who could answer all my foolish questions.

I should like it first-rate if Mr. Barnum would engage me, said the General.

I thought you remarked the other day that you had money enough and was tired of travelling, said Lavinia, with a slightly mischievous look from one corner of her eye.

That depends upon my company while travelling, replied the General.

You might not find my company very agreeable.

I would be glad to risk it.

Well, perhaps Mr. Barnum would engage you if you asked him, said Lavinia.

Would you really like to have me go! asked the General, quietly insinuating his arm around her waist, but hardly close enough to touch her.

Of course I would, was the reply.

The little General's arm clasped the waist closer as he turned his face nearer to hers, and said:

Don't you think it would be pleasanter if we went as man and wife?

The little fairy quickly disengaged his arm, and remarked that the General was a funny fellow to joke in that way.

I am not joking at all, said the General earnestly, it is quite too serious a matter for that.

I wonder why the Commodore don't come? said Lavinia.

I hope you are not anxious for his arrival, for I am sure I am not, responded the General, and what is more, I do hope you will say yes, before he comes at all!

Really, Mr. Stratton, said Lavinia, with dignity, if you are in earnest in your strange proposal, I must say I am surprised.

Well, I hope you are not offended, replied the General, for I never was more in earnest. The first moment I saw you, I felt that you were created to be my wife.

But this is so sudden.

Not so very sudden; it is several months since we first met, and you know all about me and my family, and I hope you find nothing to object in me.

Not at all; on the contrary I have found you very agreeable; in fact, I like you very much as a friend, but I have not thought of marrying, and—

And what? my dear, said the General, giving her a kiss. Now I beg of you, don't have any buts or ands about it. You say you like me as a friend, why will you not like me as a husband? You ought to get married; I love you dearly, and I want you for a wife. Now deary, the Commodore will be here in a few minutes—I may not have a chance to see you again alone—do say that we will be married, and I will get Mr. Barnum to give up your engagement.

Lavinia hesitated and finally said:

I think I love you well enough to consent, but I have always said I would never marry without my mother's consent.

Oh! I'll ask your mother. May I ask your mother? Come, say yes to that, and I will go and see her next week. May I do that, pet?

Then there was a sound of something very much like the popping of several corks for as many beer bottles. The young eaves droppers had no doubt as to the character of these reports, nor did they doubt that they sealed the betrothal, for immediately after they heard Lavinia say:

Yes, Charles, you may ask my mother.

Another volley of reports followed, and then Lavinia said:

Now Charles, don't whisper it to a living soul; let us keep our secret for the present.

All right, said the General. I will say nothing; but next Tuesday I shall start to see your mother.

Perhaps you may find it difficult to obtain her consent, said Lavinia.

At that moment a carriage drove up to the door, and immediately the bell was rung, and the little Commodore entered.

A six-year old boy was asked by his teacher to write a composition on the subject of water, and the following is the production: Water is good to drink, to swim in, and to skate on when frozen. When I was a little baby, the nurse used to bathe me every morning in water. I have been told that the Injuns don't wash themselves but once in ten years. I wish I was an Injun.

V. THE SUN, AND TOTAL SOLAR ECLIPSES.—As people sometimes learn the highest appreciation of home, friends, and other common blessings by a temporary absence from them, so some facts regarding the sun, that most familiar everyday acquaintance, have been revealed to observers in times of total eclipse, which otherwise perhaps would never have been discovered by them. And, at other times, by noticing the little spots of comparative darkness upon his disc, they have derived much information as to the origin of the light he sends us.

The surface of the sun, when viewed with a powerful instrument, appears mottled throughout its whole extent in shapes generally resembling the leaf of the willow, but of different sizes, and sometimes various in form. Besides this, one or two dark spots may almost always be detected upon it, and sometimes the disc has contained more than eighty at once. These spots are generally surrounded by a lighter margin called the Penumbra, and are frequently intersected by lines of a similar appearance. Neither the spot nor the penumbra have a uniform shade, but are raised like the bright disc. They are constantly changing in form and relative position; but beside their individual motion, they are carried around together by the sun's rotation, which is accomplished in about twenty-five days. When they are near the edge of the disc the penumbra is most distinct on the side farthest from the centre, which shows that the true nature of the spot is a depression in the luminous surface; the darkest point being the lowest, and the penumbra rising around it. To illustrate, cut in an apple a hole, flat at the bottom, and with slightly sloping sides. When the apple is held so that the cavity appears in the center, all the parts will be seen, but the sides will appear narrow; when, on the contrary the hole is viewed obliquely, the further side will be prominent, while the nearer will be entirely concealed. The appearance of a solar spot is precisely similar. In the neighborhood of the spots, and generally to the left of them, when they are near the edge of the disc, are seen bright streaks called faculæ. These are proved to be ridges, rising above the general level of the sun's surface.

From various phenomena of solar spots, Messrs. De La Rue, Stuart, and Loewy have recently formed a theory respecting their nature, and that of the general surface of the sun, which we believe is now generally held true and will here be given without reference to other opinions formerly prevailing. The source of the light and heat which we receive is not the body of the sun, but from an atmosphere filled with burning vapors (called the photosphere, i. e., sphere of light) which surrounds him; just as the light of a lamp comes not from the wick itself but from burning gases in the flame above. These vapors are those of iron and other metals and substances solid at the earth, but by the intense heat which prevails at the sun, not only melted but evaporated. By means of the spectroscope many metals have been ascertained to be the same as those found on the earth, and it is probable that there are others which we do not have here. These vapors which form the photosphere are supported like our clouds in a transparent atmosphere similar to the earth's, which extends a great distance beyond them. Spots are formed by a downward current of the atmosphere which cools the burning vapors and stops, or rather diminishes, the production of light. The walls of the cavity thus produced are somewhat cooled, but less so than the centre, hence an intermediate shade results, which appears as the penumbra. This downward current of the atmosphere necessitates an upward one near it, by which large volumes of the photosphere are brought up, causing the faculæ, which are found exactly where they would be expected under such circumstances. These processes, of course, are conducted on a vast and grand scale, else we should never be able to observe them at our distance of 95,000,000 miles. Indeed the cavities which form some of the largest spots have been found by measurement to be so immense that the whole earth might be dropped into one of them like a ball into a cup! Yet they do not appreciably affect the temperature of the sun as a whole, for they are small compared with his entire surface, his diameter being 111 times that of the earth, or 887,000 miles.

Such being the nature of the sun's surface, what appearance may we expect, and what actually occur, on occasions of total eclipse? An eclipse it is well known is caused merely by the fact that the moon is placed exactly between the sun and the observer; in other words, by the observer's standing in the shadow of the moon. If one could be always in a direction from the moon opposite that of the sun, and near enough to the line that joins their centers, the moon would of course always hide the sun from him, or he would be in perpetual eclipse. But only a small part of the earth is ever in such a position at one time, and remains so but a few minutes; hence a total eclipse at any one place is a very rare occurrance. When it takes place, the moon is generally just far enough distant to hide the photosphere of the sun, leaving the external non-luminous atmosphere unconcealed. The principal phenomenon caused by the presence of this atmosphere is called the corona, which is visible five or six seconds before the eclipse becomes total, and continues till after the sun's reappearance.

It is a ring of light encircling the sun, having, usually, a breadth of about one third his diameter and a brightness equal to that of the moon. Sometimes, however, its brightness or its breadth is much greater than this. It has generally a radiated appearance and is brightest next the sun, fading gradually as it recedes. Its color has been variously described, sometimes as pure white, sometimes as light or golden yellow, sometimes peach-colored and sometimes reddish. Its cause, no doubt, is the reflection of rays from the upper regions of the sun's atmosphere.

Immediately after the eclipse becomes total, flamelike protuberances—generally reddish, but variously described; like the corona,—issue from behind the disc of the moon. In form they frequently resemble mountains, but sometimes they are curved like a sickle, or the tops extend horizontally far beyond the base; occasionally, indeed they appear as balls, entirely detached from the sun's surface. From these shapes it is evident that they are gaseous in their nature, since no solid or liquid bodies could maintain such positions; and by careful observation it is proved that they belong entirely to the sun, not to the moon. They are supposed to be bright clouds floating at vast heights in the atmosphere already mentioned. Their observation is at present among the most interesting features of solar eclipses. Another phenomenon frequently noticed is called "Baily's beads," from the name of the discoverer. Just before the eclipse becomes total the curved line of light to which the disc of the sun is reduced is broken up into a number of points, like a string of bright beads. The simple explanation is that a chain of mountains at the edge of the moon's disc gives it a notched appearance liks a circular saw, and the beads merely mark the position of the valleys.

The darkness which attends a total eclipse is rather less than that of night when the moon is full, but, coming so abruptly in the midst of day, produces a startling impression of gloom. It is described as very different from the usual darkness of night—giving objects seen through it a yellowish or greenish tint, while the color of the sky becomes a livid purple or violet. The moon is sometimes made visible by light reflected from the earth, but has a singular purplish-gray hue. The planets and stars of the first magnitude are frequently seen. Venus has been distinguished ten minutes after the total phase had ceased and at places where only a partial eclipse occurred.

The approaching eclipse of the sun (Aug. 7th) will be only partial in Massachusetts, but in some of the Southern and Western States will be total. The interesting features of total eclipses will probably all be wanting in a situation so remote as ours, but as a partial eclipse it will be well worthy of observation, a very large part of the disc being obscured. For knowledge of the total phase we shall have to rely on the reports of others, which will no doubt be abundant soon after the event, since many parties have gone to various suitable places for purposes of scientific observation. The eclipse will begin at twenty-four minutes past five, P. M., lasting till sunset. GYAS.

ARTEMUS WARD'S FARMING.

The Barclay County Agricultural Society have seriously invited Artemas Ward to address them on the occasion of their annual Fair, he wrote to the President of the Society as follows:—

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th inst., in which you invite me to deliver an address before your excellent agricultural society.

I feel flattered and I think I will come.

Perhaps, mean while, a brief history of my experience as an agriculturalist will be acceptable; and as that history no doubt contains suggestions of value to the entire agricultural community, I have concluded to write to you through the Press.

I have been an honest old farmer for some four years.

My farm is in the interior of Maine. Unfortunately my lands are eleven miles from the railroad. Eleven miles is quite a distance to haul immense quantities of wheat, corn, rye and oats; but as I have'nt any to haul, I do not, after all, suffer much on that account.

My farm is more especially a grass farm.

My neighbors told me so at first, and as an evidence that they were sincere in that opinion, they turned their cows on to it the moment I went off "lecturing."

These cows are now quite fat. I take pride in these cows, in fact, and am glad I own a grass farm.

Two years ago I tried sheep raising. I bought fifty lambs, and turned them loose on my broad and beautiful acres.

It was pleasant on bright mornings to stroll leisurely out on the farm in my dressing gown, with a cigar in my mouth, and watch those innocent little lambs as they danced gaily o'er the hillside. Watching their saucy capers reminded me of caper sauce, and it occurred to me I should have some very fine eating when they grew up to be "muttons."

My gentle shepherd, Mr. Eli Perkins, said, "We must have some shepherd dogs."

I had no very precise idea as to what shepherd dogs were, but I assumed a rather profound look, and said:

"We must, Eli. I spoke to you about this some time ago!"

I wrote to my old friend, Mr. Dexter H. Follett, of Boston, for two shepherd dogs. Mr. F. is not an honest old farmer himself, but I thought he knew about shepherd dogs. He kindly forsook far more important business to accommodate and the dogs came forthwith. They were splendid creatures—snuff-colored, hazel-eyed, long-tailed, and shapely jawed.

We led them proudly to the fields.

"Turn them in, Eli," I said.

Eli turned them in.

They went in at once, and killed twenty of my best lambs in about four minutes and a half.

My friend had made a trifling mistake in the breed of dogs.

These dogs were not partial to sheep.

Eli Perkins was astonished, and observed:

"Wall! did you ever?"

I certainly never had.

There were pools of blood on the green sward, and fragments of wool and raw lamb chops lay around in confused heaps.

The dogs would have been sent to Boston that night, had they not suddenly died that afternoon of a throat distemper. It wasn't swelling of the throat.—It wasn't diptheria. It was a violent opening of the throat, extending from ear to ear.

Thus closed their life-stories. Thus ended their interesting tails.

I failed as a raiser of lambs. As a sheepist I was not a success.

Last summer Mr. Perkins said, "I think we had better cut some grass this season, sir."

We cut some grass.

To me the new mown hay is very sweet and nice. The brilliant George Arnold sings about it, in beautiful verse, down in Jersey every summer; so does the brilliant Aldrich, at Portsmouth, N. H. And yet I doubt if either of these men knows the price of a ton of hay today. But new-mown hay is a really fine thing. It is good for man and beast.

We hired four honest farmers to assist us, and I led them gaily to the meadows.

I was going to mow, myself.

I saw the sturdy peasants go round once ere I dipped my flashing scythe into the tall green grass.

"Are you ready?" said E. Perkins.

"I am here!"

"Then follow us!"

I followed them.

Followed them rather too closely, evidently, for a white-haired old man, who immediately followed Mr. Perkins, called upon us to halt. Then in a low, firm voice he said to his son, who was just ahead of me:

"John, change places with me. I hain't got much longer to live, anyhow. Yonder berryin' ground will soon have these old bones, and it's no matter whether I'm carried there with one leg off and terrible gashes in the other or not.—But you, John—you are young."

"The old man changed places with his son. A smile of calm resignation lit up his wrinkled face, as he said, "Now, Sir, I am ready!"

"What mean you, old man?"

"I mean that if you continner to brandish that blade as you have been brandishin' it you'll slash the devil out of some of us before we're an hour older!"

There was some reason mingled with that white-haired old peasant's profanity. It was true that I had twice escaped mowing off his son's legs, and his father was perhaps naturally alarmed.

I went and sat down under a tree.

"I never know'd a litterery man in my life," I heard the old man say, "that know'd anything."

Mr. Perkins was not as valuable to me this season as I had fancied he might be. Every afternoon he disappeared from the field regularly, and remained about two hours. He said it was head ache. He inherited it from his mother. His mother was often taken in that way, and suffered a great deal.

At the end of two hours Mr. Perkins would reappear with his head neatly done up in a large wet rag, and say he felt better.

One afternoon it so happened that I soon followed the invalid to the house, and as I neared the porch I heard a female voice energetically observe. "You stop!" It was the voice of the hired girl, and she added. "I holler for Mr. Brown!"

"Oh, no, Nancy," I heard the invalid E. Perkins soothingly say, "Mr. Brown knows I love you. Mr. Brown approves of it!"

This was pleasant for Mr. Brown.

I peered cautiou-ly through the kitchen blinds, and, however unnatural it may appear, the lips of Eli Perkins and my hired girl were very near together. She said, "You shan't do so," and he dosoed. She also said she would get right up and go right away, and as an evidence that she was thoroughly in earnest about it, she remained where she was.

They are married now, and Mr. Perkins is troubled no more with the headache.

This year we are planting corn. Mr. Perkins writes me that "on account of no skare krows bein' put up krows kum and digged fust crop up but soon got nother in. Old Bisbee who was frade youd cut his sons leggs of Ses you better go and stan up in feeld yrself with dressin gownd on & gesses krows will keep way. this made Boys in store larf. No more terday from his letter."

Yours respectful

A STRANGE ACCUMULATION.

[THOMAS DICK puts the hoarding of wealth in this striking way:

Suppose a man could lay up a stock of clothes and provisions sufficient to last him for 300 years, what would it avail him, since he can live at most but from 70 to 100 years? Suppose he had laid up in a store house 70,000 pairs of shoes, to what end would it serve, if he could make use, during his whole life, of only the one hundreth part of them? He would be in the same condition as a man who had a hundred dishes placed before him at dinner, but who could only take one; or of a person who had a hundred mansions purchased for his residence, but who could occupy only one. How ridiculous it would appear if all that could be said of a man while he lived was simply this—this his whole life was occupied in collecting and laying up in a store house 60,000 mahogany chairs which were never intended to be used for the furniture of an apartment, or 80,000 pairs of trowsers which were never intended to be worn? And where is the difference, in point of rationality and utility, between such absured practices, and hoarding thousands of guineas and bank notes which are never brought forth for the benefit of mankind. There is no conduct connected with the pursuits of human beings that appears more absurd and wicked than such practices (however common), if examined by the dictates of reason and the word of God.

SHEET MUSIC FOR SIX CENTS.—Robt. DeWitt, 13 Frankfort street, New York, is issuing a series of fine songs and ballads, arranged for voice and piano by an eminent composer, which he offers at the above low price. Among the pieces published are, Thy Voice is Near; Blue Eyed Violets; Up in a Balloon; The Maiden and her Linnet. The pieces are carefully arranged, and the mechanical appearance is excellent. They will have a large sale.

Have a purpose in life. If you don't you will not be likely to have anything as a result.

A BIG STORY.—The other evening, in our 'private crib,' there was a learned dissertation on the subject of 'Bedbugs and their remarkable tenacity of life.' One asserted of his own knowledge that they could be boiled and then come to life. Some had soaked them for hours in turpentine without any fatal consequences. Old Hanks who had been listening as an outsider, here gave in his experience in corroboration of the facts. Says he, 'Some years ago I took a bedbug to an iron foundry, and dropped it into a ladle where the melted iron was, and had it run into a skillet. Well, my old woman used that skillet for the last six years, and here the other day she broke it all to smash; and what do you think, gentlemen? that 'ere insect just walked out of his hole where he'd been layin' like a frog in a rock, and made tracks for his old roost up stairs! But,' added he, by the way of parenthesis, 'gentlemen, he looked mighty pale.'

STICKERS arising out of disappointed expectations, on the part of lottery speculators, were frequent, while the system was permitted. In the reign of George II., having dreamed of a lucky number; the footman of a lady of quality invested his savings of twenty years in purchasing two lottery tickets—both of which proved blanks. He put an end to his life, and there was found in his pocket-book the following declarations of intentions, in the event of his winning the five thousand pounds prize:

"As soon as I receive the money, I will marry Grace Towers; but as she has been cross and coy, I shall use her as a servant. Every morning she shall get me a mug of strong beer, with a toast, nutmeg and sugar in it; then I sleep till ten, after which I will have a large sack posset. My dinner shall be on table by one and never without a good pudding. I will have a stock of wine and brandy laid in. About four in the afternoon I will have tarts and jellies, and a gallon bowl of punch; at ten a hot supper of two dishes. If I am in good humor, and Grace behaves herself, she shall sit down with me; to bed about twelve." Poor fellow! he did not win the prize, so he died by his own hand!

AN ISLAND FOR RENT—TERMS MODERATE.—Any body want a kingdom all for himself, twice as big as the Isle of Wight, with hills as high as Skiddaw, timber, fresh water streams, beautiful climate, varying only from 38 to 78 degrees, and a soil that will grow anything? The Telegraph of Friday says there is such a kingdom to let, to be had of the British government for a moderate rent.

It is the Island of Auckland, 180 miles south of New Zealand, with no natives, and belonging to the Colonial Office, which some years ago leased it to the Messrs. Enderby, who leased it again to a company. The latter failed to pay the rent, and government accordingly took possession again. No further assignment has been made, and if anybody wants to be a sort of king, and can get forty or fifty laborers together, Lord Granville will we doubt not, make him lessee, Governor and Parliament altogether. He ought to be rich enough to keep a steam yacht, though, or he will be rather more secluded than if he kept a pike. If adventure is not wholly dead among us that island will be taken up this year.—[London Spectator.

DEVIL FISH CAUGHT IN A SEINE.—Captain James Johnson, of the sloop Susan Brewer, which arrived at Skidmore's wharf a day or two since, brought with him a portion of an unknown sea animal, which he caught in a seine while fishing off Smith's Island, near Cape Charles. The fish, when hauled ashore, attracted the attention of every one in that neighborhood, and was pronounced by the most ancient and experienced sea-goers to be unlike anything of the "ocean deep" they had ever seen. In shape it resembled a butterfly, with ponderous wings shaped like the human hand; a head formed like a bulldog's; tongue as hard as ivory, and instead of teeth two rows of solid ivory. Its measurement from tip to tip was twenty feet, with a tail six feet long, about the size of a telegraph wire, and resembling a black leather whip lash—weight over one thousand pounds. It was white on the belly, but spotted all over the back with round white and black marks, about the size of a five cent piece very much in appearance like ladies' mourning muslin, which, it is said, made it a beautiful sight while in the clear sea water. As state about, every one who has seen this fish pronounces it a nondescript, and the only conjecture which has been made is that it must be the "devil fish," about the existence of which much has been said, though no one in these parts has ever seen one, unless in this case. —Wash. Star.

JOHN HANCOCK.—No man, says the venerable Lewis Tappan, writing in the Advance, has probable been more overrated than John Hancock. He was rich, lived ostentatiously, and was very generous: but he was vain and unscrupulous. Almost everybody with whom he traded was obliged to sue him. My father told me that one could seldom pass the court house in Boston, during term-time, without hearing the crier of the court proclaim from the doorsteps, 'His Excellency John Hancock, come into court and make answer to A. B., or you will be defaulted. He would present to a clergyman, for example, on election day, a suit of clothes, and the tailor would have to sue the Governor for payment; and so in numerous other instances. His widow, Madam Scott, who married Captain Scott, master of one of Governor Hancock's London packets, told me in my youth that on one occasion the Governor invited the whole Senate of Massachusetts to breakfast with him without giving her any notice. She said: We have no milk for the coffee of so many persons. And he replied: Send the servants out to milk the cows on the Common. It was the custom then for the public to send their cows to crop the grass on the public common.

A friend of a recently married couple, being asked what family the bride was of, replied, 'The Gad-ites, I should think, as she is always in the street.

THE WORLD'S PROGRESS.

Steam and electricity, two great motors of civilization, have accomplished wonderful results in the past 30 years. The problem of ocean steam navigation was solved in 1838, and from that time to the completion of the Great Eastern, science made rapid strides in the advancement of its triumphs over time and space. The building of the Great Eastern was an initial step in the path of telegraphic advancement, and led to the inception of an Atlantic cable, binding the Old World with the New, in stronger bonds of commercial and business relation. The success of the Atlantic cable has developed new enterprise in the same direction, and on the shores of Massachusetts Bay where 250 years ago the frail Pilgrim bark landed her freight of adventurous humanity, a sprite from the depths of the sea has appeared, still farther uniting the two sections of the globe. The French American telegraph cable enterprise has become an entire success, and for the first time the continents are connected by a single circuit of the modern electric telegraph. From Brest to Duxbury, the communication is instantaneous and uninterrupted, and in this triumph of one of the greatest enterprises of modern civilization, we may see an incentive to the advancement of the whole civilized world. The record of the voyage of the cable steamers, from the departure from Brest on the 19th of June, to the landing at Duxbury, on the 23d of July, is an evidence of the progress of science as applied to this particular work.

Though there were delays by adverse circumstances of weather, compelling the cutting and buoying of the cable, and also through the discovery of punctured portions, perhaps the result of foul play, the laying of the cable went steadily on from day to day, until on the 10th day of July the island of St. Pierre was sighted, and the mission of the Great Eastern was ended, her assistants, the Scandarea and Chiltern, laying the remainder.

Of this immense stretch of cable between Brest and Duxbury the Great Eastern paid out 8,448 tons, or 3,564 miles, the Scandarea 450 miles, and the Chiltern 158 miles. The position of the two latter steamers had been somewhat uncertain for several days, and their sudden appearance in the Bay took the community by surprise. At about ten A. M. last Friday they were discovered approaching the shore, and at 3 P. M. the last revolution of the propellers was made. At 5 o'clock everything was in readiness for landing the shore end of the cable; two boats were lashed together, and a platform erected on them, upon which was laid the coil of cable. The boats were then slowly paddled ashore, the distance to pay out being about a mile, and on reaching the beach the men leaped overboard and dragged the remainder to dry land, and the direct connection of the United States with Europe was accomplished. Thus science has given another hostage to the world for advancement of peace and good-will among men, and unity of endeavor among nations for the same great end.

CENTENNIAL COMMENCEMENT AT DARTMOUTH COLLEGE.—The Centennial Commencement, at Hanover, N. H., during the last week, was of unusual interest.

From all parts of the country, leaving their every-day employments, the sons of old Dartmouth met in joyous reunion. Occasionally might be seen an aged man, with snowy head, leaning upon his staff, a representative of a past generation, come back again, after the lapse of many years, to the scenes of his toils and triumphs, the sole survivor of his class. And yet some of these old men enlivened the occasion with the raciest speeches and received the most hearty applause.

Commencement day is usually an event of exceeding interest in this quiet country village, but perhaps never before, since Gov. John Wentworth and staff, with sixty horsemen rode through the dense forests by "marked trees," to honor the first commencement, a hundred years ago, did Hanover know such an occasion.

But I will not detail those circumstances which have been so fully reported by the daily press, but merely give a short summary of the proceedings.

On Sunday, 18th inst., President Smith delivered his Baccalaureate sermon.

On Monday evening there was prize speaking by members of some of the classes.

Tuesday was devoted to the exercises of the graduating class, consisting of an oration, a poem, an address to the President—to which he replied,—and Centennial Poem. These were delivered in Yale's mammoth tent, which occupied a considerable portion of the Common in front of the College.

After the Centennial Poem, the graduating class, preceded by the Germania Band, and followed by a large portion of the spectators, marched to the Observatory Hill, in the rear of the College buildings, where were read the Chronicles of the Class for the last four years, also the prophecies for the future. The class then gathered around "The Old Pine Tree" which was encircled with two evergreen wreaths, one representing the Class of '69, the other, the wreath, faded and worn, that was used when first these Pine-tree exercises were instituted. The huge Pipe was passed around the class, each taking a few whiffs in memory of the past and in pledge of the future. Then forming a circle and clasping each others' hands, the parting Ode was sung, the farewell addresses spoken and the loving ties that had so closely bound them together for the last four years were forever sundered and each went forth on his own separate way, to fulfil his own particular mission in the world.

The Band, aided by Mr. Jas. Whitney and Mrs. H. M. Smith as vocalists, gave a concert in the evening.

The exercises of the succeeding day (Wednesday) were of the greatest interest. The tent was literally packed with a dense mass of human beings, each one eager to see and hear.

The presence of Chief Justice Chase, Gen. Sherman, Long John Wentworth, Senators Clark and Patterson, and a long list of notables added interest to the occasion.

In the morning President Brown of Hamilton College, formerly professor here, delivered a very able historical address, reviewing the history of the College from the time when the Charter was granted in 1769, to the present time. This address was the great feature of the day and indeed of the Commencement. It will soon be given to the public in pamphlet form. During the afternoon the time was occupied by many distinguished speakers. The Germanias gave another Concert in the evening.

On Thursday the meeting of the Alumni was held in the Chapel. It was fully attended and much enthusiasm was manifested. It was proposed to raise a fund of $200,000 and from $15,000 to $20,000 was subscribed on the spot. The Procession was then formed and marched to the tent where the proper Commencement exercises were held and degrees conferred on fifty-eight young gentlemen—one a colored person.

The speaking was about of the usual character on such occasions. The Commencement Dinner followed in the P. M.—the Levee in the evening and thus closed commencement exercises—long to be remembered by the friends of Dartmouth and calculated to elevate the character and increase the influence of that institution throughout the country.

The outward bound trains bore away the great multitude that had gathered there, and Hanover was left to its usual quiet for another year.

DUXBURY.—The landing of the cable was accomplished last Friday, the steamers having arrived several days in advance of the expected time. A large number of residents in that vicinity gathered on the beach, and welcomed the "distinguished guest" with popular demonstrations of enthusiasm. Saturday morning, a party of eminent foreigners, among them Count Faverney, French Charge D'Affaires, the Itallian minister, and others, were provided by the O. C. & N. R. R. Co. with one of their English coaches, in which they were conveyed to Kingston. As no information had been received by the officers of the Cable Company, or the citizens of Duxbury of their intended arrival, no special conveyance had been provided for them, and when reaching Kingston they were obliged to avail themselves of stage coach accommodations. An unusual number of people having come in the train, anticipating that the celebration would take place Saturday, the limited capacity of the coach was soon exhausted, and the Count Faverney succeeded only in obtaining a hold on the rack of the coach. For over three miles, through dusty roads almost unendurable, he was compelled to ride in this uncomfortable position before better facilities were furnished him. He was very much incensed at the poor condition of the roads, and returned to Boston with his party in the afternoon train.

Sir James Anderson, Lord Cecil and others also came as far as South Hanson, when they returned to Boston.

A gang of men began work early Saturday morning upon the overland telegraph route from Boston to Duxbury. The posts were erected about a week ago, so that all the work to be done was to string the wire on them. The cable across Fort Point Channel, which divides South Boston from the city proper, was laid about eight o'clock Saturday morning. Work was begun simultaneously at each end of the route—starting from Boston and also from Duxbury. Saturday night the wire had been strung upon the posts to a point five or six miles from Kingston towards Boston. The distance from Boston to Duxbury is about forty miles.

Tuesday morning a large force of workmen laid the land cable across the marsh, from the Hummock to the office at Duxbury, in the Bank building, which has been fitted up for the purpose. The cable house at the Hummock is done, and the necessary arrangements for the despatch of business over the line will soon be completed. Messages have been sent over the cable, testing it to the satisfaction of the officers.

The formal celebration of the landing of the "modern pilgrim" took place Tuesday, the exercises taking place in Gale's mammoth tent, which had been erected on an eminence overlooking the harbor and the beach. The celebration was made up of addresses, firing of salutes a levee and fireworks in the evening. Among the distinguished visitors present were Count de Faverney, Charge d Affaires, and the Count de Turenne and Mons. Beranger of the French Legation, Hon. Captain Ward (R. N) of the British Legation, Count Colobiceno Charge d' Affaires of Italy, Mons. Berch. Lord Cecil, Sir James Anderson, Sir Samuel Canning, Viscount Parker and Mr. Hill of England, Mr. Watson, agent of the cable co., Sir James Anderson. O. W. Holmes, Prof. Agassiz, Mrs. Harrison Gray Otis, Geo. S. Hillard, Geo. Ticknor, E. H. Chapin, Peleg Chandler, Hon. Harvey Jewell, Hon. Charles Sumner, the Marshfield Club, Collector Russell, Hon. R. H. Dana, Jr., George Peabody, A. T. Stuart, and many others.

The Hon. George B. Loring was called up to respond to a toast memorizing the shipmasters and shipbuilders of Duxbury, who, he said, "gave Duxbury a name in all the great markets of the world, and made it a familiar household word in Antwerp and Hamburg and Liverpool and London, long ago, in the vigorous periods of commerce, and when the names of the Giffords and Thomases, who clothe it with modern renown, were yet unknown. Forty years ago, sir, I was led along that beach now so famous, a mere child, listening to the words of these very men, who are now gone. I shall never forget them. From that day to this has gone with me the memory of George Loring, the firm and honest and reliable Puritan, bearing in his veins the blood of John Alden, and presenting in his daily life an example of integrity and wisdom which we all might follow—the companion through life of her who offered this sentiment—and the fast fraternal friend of him who led me through the early days of childhood and youth. I ought not to forget the name of George Loring while I live. And who need be reminded here of the Sampsons, that stalwart race whose axes swung the brightest and sharpest, and whose hammers, as they drove the treenails, wakened me at dawn, even in the long summer days. Can we ever forget the name of Frazer, whose virtues have fallen upon at least one of those worthy sons of Duxbury now before me. And the Smiths, and Drews, and Soules, and Westons—a long list of enterprising and honorable men, who gave this town its wealth and distinction in early days, and whose service has now fallen upon many now before me—many who perpetuate their names and inherit their good qualities—shall not all these be remembered while Duxbury—Duxbury of old, and the new and regenerated Duxbury, shall stand? The old ships may be gone, the Cherokee, the Choctaw, the Susan Drew, models in their day of the best naval architecture, may have perished; but the good name of their builders and masters still remains, and will remain so long as the commercial world shall set high value on solid ships and honest merchants. These were the men who walked with me on the beach, and these are their ships. The manners and customs of the olden times were theirs still. The venerable form of John Alleyn, the old divine, stern and incorruptible, with his silk stockings and small clothes and shoe buckles, stands there in the group, with his hands pressed upon my head, asking in tones of thunder, "What are you going to do with this boy?"—while the sands of the beach seemed opening beneath my feet, and the awful weight of an old theological verdict seemed to crush me to the earth. But now comes the modern picture. "May the electric spark now kindled so animate the coming generation that it may worthily fill the places of the past."

As Duxbury has suddenly emerged from its long eclipse, and become noted as the cable landing, a brief history of the place will be interesting at this time, and from the able correspondence of the New York Herald we derive a few facts in its history.

The chief business of the town in late years was shipbuilding; but even this has now almost entirely died out. The absence of a railroad is the attributed cause, and this agent of civilization having penetrated the neighboring town of Plymouth the business has gone over there. The population here is less than 2,000, and during the past few years it has decreased at the rate of about 100 per annum. Farming is about all that is carried on here to any extent, and next to agriculture ranks the clam and lobster business. With a railroad, which must certainly come within a year or two, it would seem that the natural resources of the town must be developed. The beach along the coast is seven miles in length and the surroundings are peculiarly adapted to rendering this a watering place second to none other in the country. The additional attraction of mountain scenery also exists here, and within a radius of a few miles there are 365 fishing ponds—one for every day in the year. The village is pleasantly located, on elevated ground, in full view of the broad expanse of the ocean, and beyond it, about two miles distant, is Captain's Hill, part of the farm of the renowned Captain Miles Standish, the military hero of New England, the view from which is not easily forgotten. Before you, in the distance, appear the white sandhills at Cape Cod, shining beyond the blue expanse; at your feet are the pleasant harbors of Plymouth, Kingston and Duxbury, sheltered from the rugged ocean by the beach, crowned at its southern extremity by the Gurnet lights, with the extending arm of Saquish enclosing the homes of the Pilgrims.—Over the forest at the northwest you see the Blue Hills of Milton.

Duxbury Bay comprises the three harbors of Plymouth, Kingston and Duxbury. From the earliest time it has been a resort of sea fowl, and has consequently drawn hither great numbers of sportsmen. The beach varies in width at different points. It runs from Marshfield in a southeasterly direction, and is entirely disjointed from the main land by the Cut River Canal, as it is called, flowing between. One of its most remarkable features is the clump of pitch-pines, situated about two-thirds of the distance from the Cut to the Gurnet, and known as High Pines. At the north end is Rouse's Hummock, where the shore end of the cable has been landed. It is a thickly wooded, conical hill, of about forty acres, its highest point being some fifty feet above the sea level.—Fears have been entertained that some time the sea might force its way through the beach, and to guard against this seawalls were built. The Gurnet comprises about 27 acres, and its name is from the gurnet fish, which abounds on the Devonshire coast of England.

THE BEACH.—The hotels of the watering places at Nantasket and Cohasset are overflowing with visitors, among them many of the fashionable swallows who migrate from year to year during the hot weather, from their city homes to these resorts. Of course the less fortunate ones who stay at home will be glad to read the following mots concerning the habitues of the seashore.

A lady is considered vulgar who does not appear in four different costumes daily, at the Rockland; one lady wore 21 new dresses last week, and she has just begun; the sponges at the seaside assume the shape of hotel waiters, who are expected to subsist on their cheek; suits of white French flannel are in vogue among gents at the shore; pretty girls are abundant, and aristocratic airs, corsets and Grecian benders are left in city chambers.

The rush to the shore is not confined entirely to people from foreign parts. Many of the residents of Weymouth and other towns in the vicinity have leased various kinds of tenements for a few weeks sojourn within easy reach of the surf, where they can bathe to their heart's content, and get a new lease of life.

BRIDGEWATER.—The funeral services of the late Increase Robinson, on Tuesday the 20th were attended by a large number of relatives and friends. Mr. Robinson was born and lived in Bridgewater until within a few years, and had been connected with the Bridgewater Iron Manufacturing Co., from his early manhood. His enterprise and sagacity had much to do with the success of this important interest, and through his exertions many improvements in the methods of manufacturing iron were introduced into this country. He visited the shops of England and Wales and through his keen observation much advantage was gained by the Companies with which he was connected. His iron frame withstood the inroads of decay incident to age in a remarkable degree, and though nearly eighty years old, he was upon the accustomed round of business to within a day or two of his death. He was widely known in connection with the Weymouth Iron Co., and at his suggestion that large and successful enterprise was entered upon. Probably no man in the country had been so long engaged in the iron manufacturing business as Mr. Robinson, and his death will be lamented by a very wide circle of relatives and business acquaintances. RANDOLPH.—The barn and house of Mr. Henry Jones, just north of Tower Hill, was totally destroyed by fire on Tuesday night, together with about two tons of hay, and a wagon. The fire originated in the barn and was evidently the work of an incendiary. The place has remained unoccupied for some time, but Mr. Jones was at home when the fire occurred. It was insured in the Braintree & Weymouth Co. for $450. Mr. Jones is the father of Obed Jones, recently murdered by Mrs. Madden in Canton.

Rev. D. T. Packard will preach at Union Congregational Church next Sabbath.

30TH ANNUAL EXCURSION.—The Weymouth Glee Club made its yearly visit to the Centre House, Nantasket Beach, Thursday of last week, calling out a large number of their friends and musical people of the vicinity. The day was especially pleasant, and every provision was made for the comfort and entertainment of the party, the concomitants being a lunch at 10, fish dinner at 3, the intervals being improved with singing of ancient and modern pieces, pitching quo'ts and horseshoes, rambling among the rocks and along the beach, rolling tenpins, fishing, sailing, and a little courting. At the dinner table a set of toasts were announced, to which responses were made by Rev. Waldron, Ellsworth, Morrison and Rockwood. In the afternoon the party were photographed by a 'special artist,' and the lineaments of about 200 of our best men and women were fully copied.

SABBATH SCHOOL PIC-NICS.—The Sabbath School of the First Universalist Society made an excursion to Lovell's Grove last Saturday, many of the party being conveyed down the river in sailboats. A large number were present in the afternoon, and the occasion was one of much enjoyment.

The Sabbath School of the Baptist Society went to Nantasket Beach yesterday and spent the day in an agreeable manner at the Beach House, where a dinner was served for the company. The proprietors of the house received much praise from the company for the fine entertainment provided.

A conference meeting was held in the Universalist church last Sunday evening, at which Mrs. S. Cobb was one of the speakers.

FIRE.—The schooner Columbus, of Rockland, Maine, loaded with lime for Messrs. Rhines and Loud & Pratt, came into the river on Saturday, and in working up to the wharf ran aground on the beach opposite Jackson's wharf, where she lay till next tide, when she floated off and hauled into the wharf. It is supposed that the vessel was strained by grounding, and sprung aleak, as the lime in her hold was discovered to be on fire Sunday evening, and an alarm was given which brought out the engines, which soon flooded the vessel with water causing a great internal commotion in the hold, and charring the vessel badly. About 200 casks of lime were spoiled, on which there was an insurance. The deck load was removed without damage.

CO-OPERATIVE STORE.—The South Weymouth Workingmen's Co-operative Association have leased the store now occupied by Roland Orcutt, and owned by L. Tuck, for the purpose of a grocery store to be conducted on the co-operative principle. The shares of the association have been nearly all sold, and business will be commenced under favorable circumstances. Mr. Geo. H. Bates is the Secretary, and has been indefatigable in his efforts to dispose of the stock. Every purchaser of goods at this store, whether a member of the company or an outsider, will be entitled to dividends of profit on the amounts purchased, for which checks are issued, denoting the amount bought.

The Sabbath school concert at the Universalist church occurs next Sunday evening.

DEATH OF A WELL KNOWN CITIZEN. Darius Smith Esq., well known to business men as a boot and shoe manufacturer in the town of Weymouth, died at his residence on Tuesday last of consumption, after an illness of several months.

SUNSTRUCK.—Mr. Whiting one of the expressmen in the employ of E. Bourke, received a sunstroke on Tuesday, while driving through Dorchester on his way from the city. He was properly cared for, and brought home in the evening, and has now recovered from its effects.

FIRE.—An old dwelling house, on Winter street, near the Nash Place, at Quincy Neck, was entirely destroyed by fire on Monday evening of last week. It had been twice set on fire previously, but the third and last time made it a complete ruin. It was owned by Mrs. Lewis Cleverly, and had not been occupied for some time. It stood high,—elevated on a hill, and its frame, which was of oak, dry and combustible, made a bright and brilliant light, which was reflected for miles around, calling out all the engines of the town, and the Union Company from Weymouth.

A little son of James Trainer, who resides on Washington street, at the Landing, met with a painful accident Wednesday night. The little fellow, who is only 19 months old, tottled up to the table which was spread for tea, and pulled a vessel containing hot tea over, the contents falling on his face and breast, and badly if not dangerous scalding him. The little sufferer was attended by Dr. Warren, who pronounced the injuries to be of a serious character.

A HARD CHASE.—The furniture store of N. B. Furnald, at Quincy, was robbed of the contents of the money-drawer last week by a young man formerly employed there, and the thief was tracked by Mr. F., to the Granite Bridge, where he was arrested, and his hands being tied he was conveyed back by way of Neponset. When he arrived there the prisoner wished to get out at his sister's a moment, which Mr. Furnald at first decided not to comply with, but on a second thought concluded to let him, and was stopping his horse, when Whalen, who had loosened his hands, jumped out, and took 'leg bail.' Mr. Furnald followed, leaving his horse in the road going along. The distance around one of the houses was measured three times, at the rate 'double quick,' the pursued leaving one corner as the pursuer came around the other; then a high board fence was scaled and the circumference of several more houses were quickly measured. At last the thief reached the lumber wharf of Mr. Pratt's, and after dodging around a dozen or more piles of boards, found a hiding place, Mr. Furnald thought he had lost him, but by perseverance he was at last found and pulled out from a pile of lumber. He was about to tie him, when again he started and after running around several piles was beginning to get the better of his pursuer, when Mr. Furnald beckoned to Mr. Pratt, and as he was passing his door he stopped him. This time he was securely bound and taken to the lock-up. (Quincy Patriot.

PERSONAL.—Hon. George H. Monroe, a Dedham-born boy, who, from his own exertions and printer's ink, has filled many responsible positions of trust, culminating in his being chosen Senator from the Highland District, in Boston, last Fall, issues in the last Suffolk County Journal, of which he has been the editor, his valedictory, being about to take a position upon a city daily. His "Templeton" letters in this paper, some years ago, will be remembered by our readers as always fresh and sparkling as champagne, but with more than a light wine body. He is just the man to take hold of a live paper in Boston, and the one that has secured his services connot fail to grow in popularity.

The mystery in which his last words leave us as to the sheet he is to furnish copy for, leads us to believe that his brain is probably to furnish the matter which some numskull will have the credit of writing—as that is the way Boston Dailies are now edited. We know the style well enough, however, to "spot" his leaders, if his name is not at the head of the column. [Dedham Gazette.

COHASSET.—Dr. Joshua R. Lothrop, brother of J. Q. A. Lothrop, of Cohasset, died in Plymouth, on Tuesday of last week, aged 46 years. The funeral services were held at Plymouth last Saturday, with Masonic ceremonies.

The Masonic lodge of Marlboro visited Cohasset on Saturday, to attend the funeral of a brother member, who belonged in C. and died at Marlboro.

PLYMOUTH.—Gilmore's Band visited Plymouth yesterday, and serenaded H. G. Parker, Esq., the Secretary of the Peace Jubilee Association, who is spending the summer in that town.

LOVELL'S CORNER.

Mr. Harry E. Dadman, a young man from Charleston, spending a vacation with Mr. Charles Hawes, in this neighborhood, met with a serious accident on Thursday of last week. While crossing a small ditch a misstep caused the breaking of his left leg below the knee. Doctor C. C. Tower was immediately called, who pronounced it a bad break. We are glad to state that under proper medical care the patient is doing well.

Mr. Dadman came to the country the evening previous to the accident, with the intention of indulging in the pleasures of a six week's rural vacation, but the mishap mentioned has put a damper on his pleasant anticipations, and is a source of sorrow to his many friends. S.

HANOVER.—Rev. Mr. Freeman, of the First Congregational Church, preached his farewell sermon last Sunday. He removed his family to York, Me, this week, where he is to take immediate charge of another society. The story of his summary dismissal has been denied by parties in Hanover, but we learn from a very reliable source that it is true, and that a member or members of the church planned the scheme more than a year ago. Mr. F. has the best wishes of many friends for future usefulness.

RUMOR.

There was a baptism at South Braintree Sunday noon. The hand of fellowship was extended to fifteen members of the Washington street Baptist church. This society is raising money to build a chapel at North Braintree.

A fault has been discovered in the Atlantic cable of 1866.

THE FIRST PALACE CAR FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN.—The arrival in New York Monday of the first Pullman palace car which has traversed the Continent from ocean to ocean is a most interesting event in the history of the Pacific Railroad. Two passengers (one of them a bearer of despatches from the Queen of Tahiti to the Emperor of the French) sailed soon afterwards in the French steamer St. Laurent for Havre and Paris, and are now well sped on the ocean towards their destination. They will thus make nearly one-third of the circumference of the globe within a fortnight, including their trip of seven days from San Francisco. Now that such a wonderful approximation to the annihilation of time and space is possible, it is no longer difficult to understand Puck's famous boast—"I'll put a girdle round about the earth in forty minutes."

THE OLD SUN TAVERN.—Air: Irish Jaunting Car—

How few of us can recollect, just three score years and ten;
The old SUN TAVERN in Dock Square, where lived the best of men;
They ate and drank their rations, cared not for bill of fare,
They smoked and laughed, and stories told, at Twenty-five Dock Square.
Chorus—Hurrah, hurrah, for RICHARDS, all hurrah!
He's Landlord of Sun Tavern, number Twenty-five Dock Square.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup.

Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills will cure Consumption, Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, if taken according to directions. They are all three to be taken at the same time. They cleanse the stomach, relax the liver and put it to work; then the appetite becomes good; the food digests and makes good blood; the patient begins to grow in flesh; the diseased matter ripens in the lungs, and the patient outgrows the disease and gets well This is the only way to cure consumption.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary Consumption. The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs, nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, and the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To do this, the Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver, so that the Pulmonic Syrup and the food will make good blood.

Schenck's Mandrake Pills act upon the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the ducts of the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved; the stools will show what the Pills can do; nothing has ever been invented except calomel (a deadly poison which is very dangerous to use unless with great care,) that will unlock the gall bladder and start the secretions of the liver like Schenck's Mandrake Pills.

Schenck's Seaweed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative, and the alkali in the Seaweed, which this preparation is made of, assists the stomach to throw out the gastric juice to dissolve the food with the Pulmonic Syrup, and it is made into good blood without fermentation or souring in the stomach.

The great reason why physicians do not cure Consumption is, they try to do too much; they give medicines to stop the cough, to stop chills, to stop night sweats, hectic fever, and by so doing they derange the whole digestive powers, locking up the secretions, and eventually the patient sinks and dies.

Dr. Schenck, in his treatment, does not try to stop a cough, night sweats, chills or fever. Remove the cause, and they will all stop of their own accord. No one can be cured of Consumption, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Catarrh, Canker, Ulcerated Throat, unless the liver and stomach are made healthy.

When there is no lung disease and only Liver Complaint and Dyspepsia, Schenck's Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are sufficient, without the Pulmonic Syrup. Take the Mandrake Pills freely in all billious complaints, as they are perfectly harmless.

If a person has consumption, of course the lungs in some way are diseased, either tubercles, abscesses, bronchial irritation, pleura adhesion, or the lungs are a mass of inflammation and fast decaying. In such cases what must be done? It is not only the lungs that are wasting, but it is the whole body. The stomach and liver have lost their power to make blood out of food. Now the only chance is to take Dr. Schenck's three medicines, which will bring up a tone to the stomach, the patient will begin to want food, it will digest easily and make good blood; then the patient begins to gain in flesh, and as soon as the body begins to grow, the lungs commence to heal up, and the patient gets fleshy and well. This is the only way to cure Consumption.

Dr. Schenck, who has enjoyed uninterrupted health for many years past, and now weighs 225 pounds, was wasted away to a mere skeleton in the very last stage of Pulmonary Consumption, his physicians having pronouncing his case hopeless and abandoned him to his fate. He was cured by the aforesaid medicines, and since his recovery many thousands similarly afflicted have used Dr. Schenck's preparations with the same remarkable success. Full directions accompany each, making it not absolutely necessary to personally see Dr. Schenck, unless patients wish their lungs examined, and for this purpose he is professionally at his Principal Office, Philadelphia, every Saturday, where all letters for advice must be addressed. He is also professionally at No. 32 Bond Street, New York, every other Tuesday, and at No. 35 Hanover Street, Boston, every other Wednesday. He gives advice free, but for a thorough examination with his Respirometer the price is $5. Office hours at each city from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

Price of the Pulmonic Syrup and Seaweed Tonic each $1.50 per bottle, or $7.50 a half dozen. Mandrake Pills 25 cents a box. G. C. GOODWIN & CO., 38 Hanover St., Boston, Wholesale agents. For sale by all druggists.

☞At a meeting of Lodge 102, K. O. S. C. held at North Weymouth on Tuesday evening, July 20, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our circle a true friend and brother, reminding us that at any time we may be called upon to follow, and to be prepared; and although we bow in submission to the Divine will, we deem it our duty to give some expression to our feelings, therefore be it

Resolved, That by the death of our venerable brother, Moses Clark, we lose a most worthy member of our Order, one of age and experience able to guide and counsel us, one who, by his example as an upright honorable Knight, gave strength to the cause for which we labor and which he loved so well.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the aged widow of our late brother, in this, her hour of sorrow, and we shall esteem it a pleasant duty to watch over and protect her while she is permitted to remain with us, as a charge intrusted to our keeping by a departed brother, and we pledge ourselves to prove faithful to this duty

The following Remedies are all old and well established and thousands have been benefited by their use. They are for sale by druggists generally.

NORFOLK, SS.
Probate Court.

TO the next of kin, Creditors, and all other persons interested in the estate of MARY E. BURRELL, late of Weymouth, in said County, widow, deceased, intestate:

Whereas, application has been made to said Court to grant a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased, to JAMES HUMPHREY, of Weymouth, in the County of Norfolk, you are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Dorchester, in said county of Norfolk, on the first day of September next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against granting the same.—And said James Humphrey is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this Citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Weymouth Weekly Gazette, printed at Weymouth, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, GEORGE WHITE, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-first day of July, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine. [12 14] J. H. COBB, Register.

To the Honorable County Commissioners for the County of Norfolk:
The undersigned, legal voters of the town of Weymouth, respectfully represent that the public convenience and necessity requires the widening and straightening of that part of the highway in said town, known as Commercial street, which lies between the dwelling house of William Wilder and the store of Messrs. Bicknell Brothers. And they therefore pray your Honorable Body to view the premises, and to make such alterations as may seem to you to be required.

ELNATHAN BATES and 52 others.
Weymouth, April 22, 1869.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

NORFOLK, ss. At a meeting of the County Commissioners begun and holden at Dedham, within and for said County of Norfolk, on the sixth day of July, A. D. 1869, by adjournment of the June meeting next preceding, on the petition aforesaid, Ordered that the County Commissioners will meet at the office of Elnathan Bates, in North Weymouth, in said County, on THURSDAY, the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1869, at ten o'clock A. M., and thence proceed to view the route described in said petition, and hear and act thereon.

And that an attested copy of said petition, with this order thereon, be served upon the Clerk of the Town of Weymouth thirty days at least before the time appointed for said view, and also that a like copy be published three weeks successively in the Weymouth Gazette, a newspaper printed at Weymouth, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before said view, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in said Weymouth, fourteen days at least before said view, that all persons and corporations interested for or against said petition may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.

8-tf JOHN O. FOYE.

To the Honorable Board of Commissioners of Norfolk County:
The undersigned citizens of Randolph and Weymouth, in said County of Norfolk, respectfully represent that the public convenience and necessity requires that a public road and highway should be laid out and constructed, beginning near the residence of the heirs of Elijah Porter, in said Randolph, and leading in an easterly direction over land of said heirs of Elijah Porter and land of Hannah Faxon, of Martin Rogers, of Simeon White, of Thomas Hollis, and others, of Sanford Hollis, of Thomas Nash, of Roswell Corbin, to Randolph Street, in said Weymouth, near the residence of said Roswell Corbin; thence widening and straightening said Randolph Street in said Weymouth, to near the residence of Harrison Carroll, thence laying out and constructing a road and highway over land of said Harrison Carroll, and land of Rachel Rogers out to said Randolph Street, near the westerly side of a Dam to Weymouth Great Pond; thence widening and straightening said Randolph street to Pond Street or the Depot road in South Weymouth.

Your petitioners therefore request you to view the premises and lay out and widen and straighten the same, or such parts thereof, as in your judgement the public convenience and necessity may require.

And as in duty bound will ever pray,
JACOB WHITCOMB, and 209 others.
Randolph, March, 1869.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts

NORFOLK, ss. At a meeting of the County Commissioners, begun and held at Dedham, within and for said County of Norfolk, on the fourth Tuesday of June, A. D., 1869

On the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, that the County Commissioners will meet at the South Weymouth Railroad Station of the Old Colony and Newport Railroad Company, in Weymouth, on Tuesday, the seventeenth day of August, A. D. 1869, at ten o'clock A. M., and thence proceed to view the route described in said petition, and hear and act thereon.

And that an attested copy of said petition, with this order thereon, be served upon the Clerks of the Towns of Randolph and Weymouth, thirty days at least before the time appointed for said view, and also that a like copy be published three weeks successively in the East Norfolk Register and the Weymouth Gazette, newspapers printed at Randolph and Weymouth, respectively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before said view, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in Randolph and Weymouth, aforesaid fourteen days at least before said view, that all persons and corporations interested for or against said petition may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.

By the County Commissioners.

NORFOLK, SS.
AT a meeting of said Commissioners held at Dedham, in and for said County, on the sixth day of July, A. D. 1869, by adjournment from the twenty-second day of June next preceding, upon a petition of E. S. Beals and six others, praying that certain portions of a highway in the town of Weymouth, from Pilgrim Wharf to Stepping Stone Bridge, should be widened and straightened and other portions discontinued, and as set forth in said petition (notice having first been duly given to all persons and corporations interested), said Commissioners met at the office of E. S. Beals in Weymouth, on the twenty-ninth day of June, A. D. 1869, and viewed the route and premises, and heard all persons and corporations interested, and said case was thence continued and adjourned to the sixth day of July; and said Commissioners now adjudge that the public convenience and necessity require that said petition be granted.

FOUTZ'S MIXTURE,
The Great External Remedy.
For Man and Beast.
It will Cure Rheumatism.

The reputation of this preparation is so well established, that little need be said in this connection.

On MAN it has never failed to cure PAINFUL NERVOUS AFFECTIONS, CONTRACTING MUSCLES, STIFFNESS and PAINS IN THE JOINTS, STITCHES in the SIDE or Back, SPRAINS, BRUISES, BURNS, SWELLINGS, CORNS and FROSTED FEET. Persons affected with Rheumatism can be effectually and permanently cured by using this wonderful preparation: it penetrates to the nerve and bone immediately on being applied.

ON HORSES it will cure SCRATCHES, SWEENEY, POLL-EVIL, FISTULA, OLD RUNNING SORES, SADDLE or COLLAR GALLS, SPRAINED JOINTS, STIFFNESS OF THE STIFLES, &c. It will prevent HOLLOW HORN and WEAK BACK IN MILCH COWS.

I have met with great success in bringing my Mixture within the reach of the Public. I am daily in receipt of letters from Physicians, Druggists, Merchants and Farmers, testifying to its curative powers.

DODD'S
NERVINE
NEW LONDON, CONN., April 26, 1869.
REMEMBERED FRIEND—I thought it well to wait another week before writing, to see if I continued to improve, as I have been doing for some time, under the treatment of the new medicine, and I am happy to tell you that I am getting better—even faster than when you were here. I commenced the use of DODD'S NERVINE without anybody advising me to it. When I began with it I could only walk from my bed to the chair. My trouble has been extreme pain in the head, and has lasted over three years. All the medicine I have taken heretofore taken has failed to give any relief. I am now able to go up and down stairs, and daily improving. I consider the NERVINE the best medicine I ever found, and shall continue its use, for I am confident of entire recovery. I have taken only three bottles, and would not be without it on any account.

PIQUANTS.

The oldest Woman's Club—The broomstick.

He who gives a trifle meanly, is meaner than the trifle.

Beware of judging hastily: it is better to suspend an opinion than to retract an assertion.

A merchant advertises for a burglar. He has broken the key of his safe, and cannot get at the valuables.

MINISTER BURLINGAME lately rebuked the foreigners who thought they 'outranked' him in Paris, in the following style —'We Americans do not raise the question of rank. We receive all gentlemen as occupying a common level. But if you raise the question of position, we outrank you. You are nothing but dukes, marquises and counts. We belong to the royal family. We are the equal of our President. We are all heirs apparent to the throne. We stand up for our order, and if need be, we fight for our rights.'

An incompletely reconstructed Southerner moved to Vermont lately, and soon afterwards his family was increased by the addition of a 'native Vermonter.' His oldest son, a boy of four years, was at first delighted with his little brother, but after a few weeks began to tire of his crying, and got a little jealous from fancied neglect. One day he climbed up into his father's lap, and asked him,

'Papa, which do you like best, me or the baby?'

The father, thinking to please the little prattler, said that he liked him best.

After a serious thought, the shrewd youth said,

'Pa, I know why you like me best.'

'Why?' asked the father.

'It's because I am a Southern man, and baby is a Yankee.'

JOSH BILLINGS' GOOSE TALK.—The goose is a grass animal, but don't chaw her cud.

They are good livers; about one aker to a goose is enuff, altho' there is some folks who think that one goose tew about 175 akers is nearer rite.

These two kalculations are so far apart that it is difficult tew tell now what will finally win.

But I don't think if I had a farm of 175 akers, awl paid for, that I would sell it for half what it was worth, just because I didn't have any goose upon it.

Geese stay well: some of our best biographers say seventy years, and grow tuff tew the last.

They lay one egg at a time, about the size of a goose egg, in which the goslin lies hid. The goslin is the goose's babe.

The goose don't suckle it's young, but turns them out to pasture on somebody's vacant lot.

They seem to lack wisdom, but are considered sound on the goose.

They are good eating, but not good chawing: the reason of this remains a profound sekret tew this day.

When a female goose iz at work hatching, she iz a hard bird to please; she riles clear up from the bottom in a minit, and will fight a yoke of oxen if they show her the least bit of sass.

The goose is excellent for feathers, which she sheds every year by the handful.

The editor of the Wisconsin Banner says: 'Wednesday's mail brought to us a letter addressed 'Rev.', another, 'Col.', one 'Mr.', and the last, 'Esq.' On the way to dinner we accidentally stepped on a woman's trail, and she addressed us thus: You brute.

In one of our large cities, a short time ago, a western editor was met by a friend who, taking him by the hand, exclaimed; I am delighted to see you. How long are you going to stay? Why, I think, said the editor, I shall stay while my money lasts. How disappointed I am, said the friend, I hoped you were going to stay a day or two.

A lady was examining an applicant for the office of maid of all work, when she interrogated her as follows: Well, Mary, can you scour tin ware with alacrity? No, ma'am, replied Mary, I always scour them with sand.

Dogs are the greatest wags we have.

An extraordinary locality—the locality where the Dead Sea.

A Yankee in Paris, who was listening to the boasts of some English and French about the wonderful genius of their respective countrymen, at last 'broke out,' and said: O, pshaw! yeou git out! Why, there's Bill Devine, of our village, who kin paint a piece of cork so 'zactly like marble that the minute you throw it into the water it will sink to the bottom jes' like a stone.

There goes a man, said a friend to another, who is worth his hundred thousand dollars. Yes, quietly said the other, looking after the rich man and that is all he is worth.

A Massachusetts farmer claims to have a kind of potatoe just fifteen minutes earlier than the Early Rose.

The Sacramento Times says, in the course of a report of the proceedings at a public dinner, The Mayor, the ladies, etc., were appropriately and elegantly drunk, and the party separated in fine cheer.

A traveler in Paris, having occasion for a hair cutter, sent for one. At the appointed time an elegantly attired person arrived, and the gentleman sat down before his dressing case to prepare for the operation. The man walked round his 'client' once or twice, and finally taking his stand at some distance, attentively scrutinized the gentleman's face with the air of a connoisseur looking at a picture. Well, said the traveler, impatiently, when are you going to begin? Pardon me, sir, was the polite reply; I am not the operative but the physsogomist. Adolphe! he cried out, and a sleeved and aproned barber entered from the hall: a la Virgil! With this laconic direction as to the model after which the gentleman's hair was to be arranged the artist retired.

One of the fashionable churches of New York, which tried to draw a crowd by having handsome young ladies act as ushers, has been laughed out of the practice. The church got to be known by the name of the church of the holy waiter girls.

The N. Y. Telegraph says suicide is again in fashion, but the right men are not afflicted with the mania. We could spare a few politicians, but they don't take—neither the hint nor the disease.

It is said that a dog taken in his infancy and held for three-quarters of an hour with his head under water will never have hydrophobia, even if bitten by a mad dog.

Suspicion and distrust are the greatest enemies to friendship.

Riches got by deceit cheat no man so much as the getter.

An Irish landlord, who had fled to England through fear of an uprising among his tenants, sent the following comforting message back to his steward; Tell the peasants that no threats to shoot you will terrify me.

Leavenworth claims to be so healthy that when it lately became necessary to inaugurate the new graveyard, they had to shoot a man on purpose. On the other hand, a Nebraska man, when asked whether the Kansas people were fairly honest, said, Don't know about honest; but they do say as how the folk around take in their stone fences every night. Lawrence, the State capital, which is on the dried up Kansas River, sneeringly says of all the new towns on the Missouri, that the boats that ply between them are so dangerous that the fare is collected in installments every five minutes throughout the trip.

A thorough washwoman—Sal Soda.

For Painter's Colic,

Use Davis' Vegetable Pain Killer

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Ulcerous affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

Ayer's

Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

CARD PICTURES taken with all the late improvements. All kinds of Photographic Likenesses, from the smallest Tintypes to Life Size Portraits, executed in the best style.

Especial attention paid to copying From Old Daguerreotypes, Ambrotypes, Tintypes, &c. This branch of the business he makes a Specialty, and would call attention to the fact that he seldom fails to give Perfect Satisfaction, even in Copying from Old Pictures which have been injured by stains or otherwise, and spoiled in themselves.

Many having copies of deceased friends are unwilling to trust them in the hands of a Photographer to copy, for fear they may be lost or injured. The most extreme care will be used by him with such pictures while in his hands. He employs one of the best Artists in Boston, who finishes his pictures in India Ink or Colors equal to any city work, and at less prices.
